THE PUBLIC SCHOOL.—RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION.—The 19th Clause of the Public School Act is as follows:—In every Public School Four Hours during each school day shall be devoted to secular instruction exclusively, and of such Four Hours Two shall be in the morning and Two in the afternoon, and A PORTION OF EACH DAY, NOT LESS THAN ONE HOUR, SHALL BE SET APART WHEN THE CHILDREN OF ANY ONE RELIGIOUS PERSUASION MAY BE INSTRUCTED BY THE CLERGYMAN OR OTHER RELIGIOUS TEACHER OF SUCH PERSUASION. PROVIDED THAT IN CASE OF THE NON-ATTENDANCE OF ANY CLERGYMAN OR RELIGIOUS TEACHER DURING ANY PORTION OF THE PERIOD HEREBY SET APART FOR RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION, SUCH PERIOD SHALL BE DEVOTED TO THE ORDINARY SECULAR INSTRUCTION IN SUCH SCHOOL.

PUBLIC SCHOOL REGULATIONS.—RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION.—63: During an hour of each day (designated in the Time-table) children whose parents desire that they should receive special religious instruction from the pastors or other approved religious teachers of their respective communions shall be allowed to receive such instruction, so far as the school buildings will admit of distinct classes being formed. Every Public School is to be so arranged as to admit of the formation of one such Denominational class at least; and if the simultaneous teaching of more than one be impracticable, it will be necessary to arrange that classes of the different Denominations be formed on distinct days of the week. Such arrangements must, however, be left in a great measure to the good feelings and convenience of the parties concerned, as circumstances will necessarily vary to much to admit of uniform regulations being applicable in all cases. In Denominational Schools, the occupation of the pupils during the hour allotted to special religious instruction is left entirely to the arrangement of the Local Boards.
 These opportunities have been neglected by the Ministers of Religion.

SUNDAY SELLING.
TO THE SONS AND DAUGHTERS OF TEMPERANCE OF NEW SOUTH WALES.
Brothers and Sisters,—At the Annual Session of the National Division of Australasia, held at the Temperance Hall, Pitt-street, on the 23rd, 24th, and 26th March, 1875, it was moved, seconded, and carried unanimously,—"That, in the opinion of this National Division, it is desirable a bill be at once introduced into our Legislature for the purpose of putting an end to the Sunday traffic in strong drink, such traffic being highly injurious to the morals of the community." "That a committee to prepare such bill be appointed, and that Brother Davies, as Most Worthy Patriarch, be requested to take charge of the measure."
In accordance with such resolution, the Bill has been prepared and introduced into the Assembly, and the Executive of the National Division now call upon the Grand and Subordinate Divisions in the colony to aid, by all legitimate means, the efforts being made to influence public opinion in favour of the proposed Bill. Two courses are open, namely, the holding of public meetings, and obtaining signatures to petitions. It is to be hoped that for the honour of the Order both will be freely used, and that all petitions, when signed, will be forwarded to Mr. JOHN OSBORNE, Temperance Hall, Sydney.
By order of the Executive in L. P., and F.

AUSTRALIAN MUTUAL PROVIDENT SOCIETY.

THE twenty-seventh annual meeting of the members of the Australian Mutual Provident Society was held at the Chamber of Commerce, yesterday afternoon. There was a very large attendance of members. The Hon. John Smith, M.L.C., occupied the chair. The following directors were present: The Hon. John Fairfax, M.L.C.; Messrs. G. R. Dibbs, J. E. Ives, R. J. King, and the Hon. Saul Samuel, M.L.C.

The proceedings were opened by the Secretary reading the advertisement convening the meeting.

Mr FREDERICK LEE rose to move the adjournment of the meeting. The directors of the society were responsible for this extreme step on his part of intercepting the action for the adoption of the report, because they had acted illegally in overriding the by-laws. In accordance with the 19th by-law, he sent in to the Board a number of resolutions which he wished to have discussed at the present annual meeting. He fully complied with the by-law in giving thirty-days' notice, and he expected to see his resolutions advertised in the paper on the morning after he had sent them in. They were no advert sed, however, but he received a letter from the secretary, intimating him that the Board considered it inconvenient to make any addition to the business already announced by advertisement for the annual meeting; and also that, as the principles of his proposed resolutions had been recently decided by a large majority of the members, it was thought inexpedient to reopen the question at the desire of one member. He maintained that the directors acted contrary to the 19th by-law, which provided that, at the annual meeting, any business of which due notice had been given might be considered, and required the directors to advertise the resolutions. Before the 25th annual meeting Mr. Dibbs sent in a string of resolutions in the very same way that he (Mr. Lee) did, giving thirty days' notice of them, and, as a matter of course, they were put on the business paper. But the directors had thought proper not to place his resolutions on the business paper, because they were inconvenient, and it was inexpedient to consider them. They might do the same thing in regard to any vote of censure or charge of corruption. Were the by-laws waste paper that the directors were at liberty to disobey them if they pleased? Or had directors privileges which belonged to no other persons, as appeared from the favour shown to Mr. Dibbs's resolutions? He looked in vain for any such thing in the Act of Incorporation. The directors had no such privileges; they had departed from the practice followed in this and kindred institutions; they had delivered a blow at free discussion; they had made an attempt to rule the society by an oligarchy, to rule over the united people of the society, and establish in its place a plutocracy one. He was not speaking on account of any personal wrong he had in the matter, but because every member of the society was interested; the rights and privileges of them all were threatened; if the directors could ignore his resolutions they could ignore those of any other member, and so have everything carried on as they themselves pleased. He was perfectly convinced that his construction of the 19th by-law was correct; but, in order to have it placed beyond dispute, he had obtained the opinion of a barrister of high standing at the Bar—Mr. Butler, Q.C.—and he would read what that opinion was.

Mr. DAVIES rose to order. He thought Mr. Lee was adopting a very inconvenient course in intercepting the proper business—(cheers)—and he suggested to him—[Mr. LEE: Your suggestion will not be attended to.]—to get up a resolution. [Mr. LEE: That is just what I do not want to do.] He thought this a most improper course.

The CHAIRMAN said it was no doubt inconvenient, but he was prepared to say it was not in order.

Mr. LEE resumed. He read the opinion of Mr. Butler, the gist of which was that the Board acted wrongly in refusing to advertise Mr. Lee's resolutions as part of the business to the annual meeting. He next inferred to the letter sent to him by the Board, informing him that it would be inconvenient and inexpedient to bring the matter forward again. He considered that the part of the letter containing that statement was the most important statement in the whole letter, for the directors themselves set him the example of reopening the question. When Mr. Dibbs brought forward his resolutions, they were adopted and carried; and afterwards Mr. Campbell brought forward a motion to rescind them, and they were rescinded in consequence of a misrepresentation of facts by Mr. Alexander Campbell, and by a misrepresentation of facts and gross and wilful falsehoods on the part of Mr. Alexander Black, the actuary. [Interruption and cries of "order."]

The Hon. SAUL SAMUEL rose to order and asked whether the meeting would allow an officer of the society—[Mr. LEE: What is the point of order? I ask what is the point of order?]—who had no opportunity of defending himself, to be spoken of in such a manner? [Cries of "No!" and interruption.]

The CHAIRMAN: I think Mr. Lee is going beyond the limits of fair discussion.

Several members rose to speak, and one or two insisted that Mr. Lee should not be allowed to proceed until he had made an apology.

Mr. LEE: I am going to prove what I say; and why should I apologise?

Mr. BLACK: I can prove that what I said is correct.

The CHAIRMAN: I put it to the meeting whether Mr. Lee is to be heard further unless those words are retracted. [Interruption and vociferous cries of "No."]

Mr. LEE: Well, I withdraw the assertion and leave the inference. [Loud cries of No, no, and order.] Mr. Lee proceeded to make some observations on something which was said on a previous occasion by Mr. Campbell in reference to publishing a list of the names of the members of the society, but he was called to order by Mr. Samuel for departing from the subject before the meeting, which was the consent of the directors, and the chairman upheld the point of order.

Mr. LEE continued: But referring next to a previous statement made by the Actuary, that lists of members' names were not published by the Mutual Life Assurance Society of London, he was met with cries of "question," and Mr. Samuel again rose to order. The CHAIRMAN again ruled that Mr. Lee was not in order.

Mr. LEE read a letter received from the actuary of the London Mutual Society showing that lists were published, and other letters showing that the same thing was done in other societies. He further animadverted upon the conduct of the directors, and concluded by urging the meeting not to allow their rights and privileges to be trampled on by any directors with impunity.

Mr. W. S. CLARKE seconded the motion.

Mr. STEPHEN, the solicitor to the Society, explained the reasons upon which he advised the Board to take the course complained of by Mr. Lee. The 19th by-law directed that no special business could be considered at the annual meeting unless the Board, at the instance of members, or otherwise, shall cause notice thereof to be published not less than thirty days before the meeting. There was not one word in any by-law which said that the Board shall give any notice unless such notice be signed by twenty-five members. Mr. Butler had evidently overlooked the words "at the instance of members," since in his written opinion the words "at the instance of a member" appeared. He therefore advised the Board that on the notice given to them it was in their discretion whether the business should be considered at this meeting or not. If any member of the society wished to have any business considered it was necessary to get twenty-five members to sign a requisition for that purpose.

The CHAIRMAN said that the solicitor having explained his legal view of the case, he wished to state how the directors viewed it. He was surprised that Mr. Lee should suppose that the directors wished to stifle discussion—(hear, hear)—and that he should have so misunderstood the word "inconvenient" as to believe that it referred to the personal convenience of the directors. He said for himself, and he was sure that he might safely say it for his brother directors also, that the idea of their personal convenience never entered into the question at all. They had reason to believe that other questions would be discussed at this meeting in which the members generally would take more interest, and they know from experience that the fewer important questions brought before an annual meeting the better, more especially if any of the subjects should lead to a ballot. Their desire was to save inconvenience to the members of the society. Mr. Lee had represented that the Board wrote to him, saying that this matter must not be reopened. No such words were to be found in the letter addressed to Mr. Lee. [Mr. LEE: Something similar, though.] They stepped out of their way to explain to him the course they felt it their duty to pursue. He did not say that either the Board of directors or their solicitor was infallible, and it was therefore possible that they were wrong in the legal interpretation of the by-law. He had, however, no doubt that Mr. Butler was wrong and that Mr. Stephen was right, because Mr. Butler had omitted to notice the great force of the words "at the instance of members," not a member. The right way to proceed was by requisition, and it was easily seen by the experience of this evening how very inconvenient it was to import a question of this kind into the annual meeting. He trusted there would be no discussion on the question, but that the meeting would go to a vote.

Mr. BRODZIAK asked whether the same answer that was given to Mr. Lee was given to Mr. Campbell and Mr. Dibbs when they gave notice of their resolutions.

Mr. STEPHEN said that there was no analogy between Mr. Lee's case and Mr. Campbell's. Mr. Campbell's resolutions were introduced at a special meeting, and they were advertised in the first instance as a part of the business of that meeting.

The CHAIRMAN: Mr. Campbell's resolutions were the subject of a special meeting. [A member: What about Mr. Dibbs's?] He did not recollect the circumstances; but the directors had the power to put on the annual business paper anything they pleased.

Mr. MARWICK asked if they were to understand that any notice of business for the annual meeting was to be signed by twenty-five members.

The CHAIRMAN: If any member wishes to have business brought before the annual meeting he must obtain the consent of the Board. It is in their discretion to arrange the business for the annual meeting. They had no discretion whatever in the case of special meetings.

Mr. S. A. JOSEPH thought that time would have been saved if the Board had placed Mr. Lee's business on the paper, and allowed the meeting to decide whether they would entertain it, after the regular business had been disposed of. He hoped that, before this question was dismissed, some satisfactory conclusion would be come to in reference to it.

After some remarks from Mr. BRODZIAK, the Hon. THOMAS HOLT, and Mr. G. H. REID,

Mr. CAMPBELL said he wished to clear himself from the very grave charge of misrepresentation, which had been made against him by Mr. Lee. He maintained that he made no misrepresentation on the subject of publishing the list of members of the society. He never denied that there were partial publications of lists in English offices, but he did deny that there was ever any instance in the history of life assurance societies where a small body of men, meeting at a head office, passed a resolution to publish the names of 17,000 members without their knowledge or consent.

Mr. BLACK also desired to make an explanation, and in doing so he read the following correspondence which had passed between himself and the actuary of the London Life Assurance Society:—

"22nd October, 1875.

"Thomas Tully, Esq., Actuary Mutual Life Office, King-street, Cheapside, London,

"Dear Sir,

"At the annual meeting of this society, held in April, 1874, one of our members proposed a resolution, copy of which I annex.

"The resolution was passed at that meeting, but being informal the directors did not give effect to it and at our annual meeting in April last the resolution was rescinded. Mr. F. Lee, on the authority of Mr. Davis who is, I believe, the son of a late director of the Mutual, stated at one of the meetings that the Mutual Life Office of London not only published a list of members but circulated it among the shareholders (meaning the members). When in England, in 1873, I called on Mr. Inzall for the purpose of ascertaining the practice of the Mutual in reference to voting, mode of electing directors, and such like matters, and he kindly gave me a copy of your new deed of settlement. As the 44th section is so stringent in reference to the exhibition of books and documents, &c., I felt justified in saying in reply to Mr. Lee's assertion, that the Mutual Life Office did not publish such lists as were asked for here; and I read your by-law bearing on the point. At a meeting of the society held last month, Mr. Lee read his letter of 9th April last, addressed to you, and your reply to him, dated 9th June. The subject could not then be discussed, but he promises to bring it forward at next annual meeting. I should be very much obliged if you would write, and tell me if it is now the custom of your society to print lists of its members, and, if so, how often they are corrected and made up for publication, also, if the list includes all your members, however recently they may have been assured; or if you allow any, and what period to elapse, before they are included in the printed list. I should also like to know if you print the address of the members.

"Members in this society are entitled to vote immediately after they have taken out a policy, and they are allowed one vote for each £100 assured up to £2000; but no member has more than twenty votes. You will very much oblige by furnishing me with information on these points.

"I am, dear Sir, yours truly,
(Signed) "M. A. BLACK, Actuary."

"The Mutual Life Assurance Office, 39, King-street, Cheapside, E.C., London, 21st December, 1875.

"Dear Sir,—I have to acknowledge the receipt of your favour of the 22nd October last, and in reply beg to inform you that it has been the custom of this office for many years to publish a list of members including every member no matter how recent his policy was effected, but excepting those who formally object to have their names printed. Our by-law on the subject is as follows:—

"'That whenever a list of members be printed it be made to include all the members, excepting those who object; and in order that there may be no mistake on the point there is to be printed on the envelope of every policy a notice to the following effect—

"'If the holder of the within policy object to have his name placed in the list of members printed for circulation, he should write to the actuary to that effect, otherwise his name will be inserted in the list as a matter of course.'

"The names and addresses of the directors and other officers are to be printed at the commencement of the list as well as in the body.'

"I enclose this letter in one of our policy envelopes, and I also send you by book post a copy of our last list of members.

"We have no special period for correcting or issuing the list, but a new list is generally prepared a month or so prior to an election.

"A copy is furnished to any member on application.

"I remain yours truly,
"M. W. MANLY, Assistant Actuary.

"M. A. Black, Esq., Australian Mutual Provident Society, 98, Pitt-street, Sydney."

The statement which he had made, therefore, and which Mr. Lee had declared to be false, was perfectly correct.

Mr. LEE replied, and the motion to adjourn was put and negatived by a large majority.

The CHAIRMAN asked the meeting whether the report should be taken as read.

The meeting having expressed its assent to this suggestion, the report was taken as read. [The report was published in full in our issue of Saturday last.]

The CHAIRMAN then said the directors had determined on making a slight alteration on the usual mode of conducting their proceedings. The usual plan had been for the chairman to move the adoption of the report, upon which a discussion usually ensued, questions were asked, and by-and-bye the motion for the adoption was carried. But they had been informed by a member that he intended to move a resolution, and he had put it to them whether it would be better to put it as an amendment or as a substantive motion in reference to the new building. They would see by the 19th by-law that it was the business of the annual meeting "to receive and consider the report of the directors." The term "adopt" was not used in that by-law, and it had been held by some—though he did not hold it himself—that when once the report was adopted all further discussion upon it was stopped. The Board did not want to stop discussion on any matters relating to the report. But if he were to move the adoption of the report, and some amendment were carried upon it, the directors would have to receive it as a vote of censure, even if it were not so intended by the mover. It therefore appeared to the Board that the best way would be to move that the report be received. He would not trouble the meeting now with any remarks, but would simply move that the report be received.

The Hon. JOHN FAIRFAX seconded the reception of the report.

Mr. J. MULLENS, who was received with cheers, said he would at once proceed without delay to the business of which he had given notice, and would ask certain questions.

Mr. MARWICK asked if twenty-five persons had signed a requisition in favour of Mr Mullens's resolutions.

The CHAIRMAN said the only motion before the meeting was that the report be received, and he had no right to suppose that any gentleman would do anything but speak to that motion.

Mr. MULLENS said that, as a matter of courtesy, he had sent in a letter to the Board to say that he would ask certain questions at that meeting. He had no resolution at all.

Mr. MARWICK moved,—"That Mr. Mullens be not heard until the question was answered."

The CHAIRMAN: [illegible] such motion.

Mr. MULLENS said the subject matter of his questions was in the report, and therefore he had a legal right to ask his questions. The first was, what did the new site purchased by the society some time since cost?

The CHAIRMAN said the new site cost £10 080.

Mr. MULLENS then asked what was the liability on the present contract for the foundations, including the architect's commission?

The CHAIRMAN said the contract was £6850, but the work had been done actually for £5770—a little under the sum. To that might be added about £300 for commission.

Mr. MULLENS next asked what was the estimate for the superstructure to be erected on the foundations, including architect's commission and other charges for supervision, and whether any tenders have been invited for the work; also, whether the estimate, if there be one, includes the cost of office fittings and furniture and other appliances; and, if not, what would be the cost of the same.

At the request of the Chairman the Secretary read a letter from the architect, in reply to the last two questions, from which it appeared that the superstructure was estimated to cost £59,798; the fittings and decorations were set down at £3500; the completion of the basement, £1500; clerk of works, £400; architect's commission, £2528; cost of foundation and basement, £5770; making a total cost of £53,502.

Mr. HORBURY HUNT complained that a letter he had written to the Board had not been answered. He had written to suggest that instead of inviting public competition, some four or five architects should be selected to prepare plans, each to receive 100 guineas. He would like to know from the Board why his letter was not answered, and why there was such a hurry in appointing Mr. Mansfield.

The CHAIRMAN expressed his regret that the letter should have remained unanswered, but thought it must have been written before the last annual meeting, and therefore could not be brought before them now. He was informed that the letter was received while the secretary was away in Brisbane, and that several letters were unanswered during the same period. He did not think that the directors were open to any charge of hurry with regard to the new building; he rather thought they would have been charged with the opposite. At the last annual meeting he announced that the contract had been taken for the basement, and told them that the building upon it would probably be expensive.

Mr. HUNT asked why was there such a hurry to put in the foundations before the plans were properly prepared.

The CHAIRMAN thought it scarcely worth while going into those details, but all the interior arrangements had been carefully considered and settled before the plan of the basement was determined upon. He might mention that the directors were advised that it would be better to get the basement put in as early as possible, in case of any settlement taking place.

Mr. HUNT asked what were the dates of appointing the architect and of calling for tenders for the work.

The CHAIRMAN said that the architect was appointed on the 20th October, 1874, and the first tender was taken in March, 1875.

Mr. MULLENS said that when it would be in order to do so he would move the adoption of the report with a rider appointing a committee to assist the Board to come to some determination about the new building.

The CHAIRMAN said that if any member would like any information about other matters, it had better be given before the motion for the adoption of the report was moved.

Mr. J. PALMER asked whether the large amount in the report representing surrenders was an indication of a loss of confidence in the society.

The CHAIRMAN replied that it was found that after every quinquennial investigation, and after the bonuses had become payable, a large number of surrenders were made. A great number of persons hung on until the surrender values were ascertained, and then they dropped their policies. It did not imply any want of confidence in the society.

The motion was put to the meeting and passed.

Mr. MULLENS moved,—"That the report now read, with the exception of the paragraph relating to the erection of the proposed new offices, be adopted, and that the subject of the immediate erection of new offices for the society be referred back to the Board, and to a committee of the following six members of the society, namely, Walter Bradley, Walter Friend, J. H. Goodlet, G. A. Murray, H. E. Tidswell, and the mover, to inquire into the whole subject of the present accommodation of the staff, the desirability of removal to new offices, the desirability of adopting plans now presented to the meeting in relation both to accommodation and cost, together with the probable value of the present building in diminution of such cost, and to report to a special meeting of the members to be convened for the purpose." He was glad that a way had been made for him to move this motion in the interests of the society without casting any censure upon the Board, who he was sure gave a very great deal of time to the society, and endeavoured to do what was right. The course of action he was taking was unusual, but he took that course, because according to the report of the last quinquennial meeting it was not expected that a very large sum would be spent on a new building in excess of the amount for which the present handsome building of the society would be sold for; and at the last meeting it was stated that the new building would cost about £30,000. With that he had been perfectly content, and content that the matter should be left with the Board. But he was somewhat startled a few weeks ago by hearing £80,000 named as the probable cost of the new building. That amount was so largely in excess of the sum it was expected last year that the building would cost that he thought it his duty to let the members know what was projected in order that the subject might receive fair consideration at this meeting. He objected to the very large cost at which this building would be erected. By the estimate of the architect it would cost about £64,000. He proposed that the Board should call in a few gentlemen of practical sense and well known business habits to consult with them on the subject, and take some of the responsibility from their shoulders. He was sorry that some chance had not been given to a circle of eminent architects; but as the Board had appointed a gentleman of eminence in the profession, he was under the strictest receipt that appointment. He would not prejudge that question. The point now was this—whether the sum proposed to be spent was in a very large sum. He had taken some pains to ascertain the cost of a few buildings in and about Sydney, and he would state to the meeting the information he had obtained. He was not quite sure of the dimensions of the ground the society had, but he thought it was but 100 feet on three frontages, and a little over 50 [Mr. STEPHEN: 64.] on the long frontage. [Mr. STEPHEN: 64 and 70.] But that did not matter. The comparison would be near enough if they had a square block of about 100 feet by 60. Messrs. Hoffnungs' building in Pitt-street was 62 feet by 95 feet. It was a fine handsome block, and had a separate back score, and it cost £9000. It was a remarkably cheap building. Messrs. Dalton, next door, were building on a piece of ground a shade larger than Hoffnung's. They were putting up two stores on the back ground, and the contract for the whole was, he believed, £16,000. Messrs. Bradley, Newton, and Smith were now erecting a building. The ground had a frontage of 60 feet by 180, and, with the exception of a small yard, was covered with buildings. The main building had two ornamental fronts, and the whole work was being completed for the sum of £16,000. There was a large block of buildings the owner of which did not wish his name mentioned, forming one of the handsomest blocks in Sydney. It had a frontage of 253 feet to one of the leading streets, and a depth of 170 feet. It was covered with handsome buildings and there were plenty of stores in the backyard. This block with the land and all cost £65,000. (Applause.) There was another eminent institution with two fronts—the Commercial Bank. That building cost more in comparison with estimated cost of the building proposed to be erected for the society, as it was built at a very dear time. [Mr. FAIRFAX: Cheap times—twenty-five years ago.] The times then were much dearer than they were now. The Commercial Bank cost £60,000. But this bank accommodated fifty-four clerks, and within it was the manager's residence. Then there was the University, the architect of which, Mr. Blacket, informed him that he was paid commission on £73,000. Of course, he (Mr. Mullens) could not say what was spent in fittings. There was another building, and that was the Post Office. The Post Office was built throughout of stone, and had some very expensive granite pillars; it was five stories high, contained sixty-five rooms—some of very large size and accommodated a staff of three hundred workmen. The cost of that building was £73,000. [The CHAIRMAN: I think you are mistaken there, Mr. Mullens.] He had obtained the figures from what he thought was an authentic source. [Mr. HUNT: Do we understand that that is the cost of the whole when finished?] It might be for the roof and stone walls alone; he could not tell. But the comparison was quite near enough for his point if he took the amount to represent the cost of the walls and the roof. The original contract was for £40,000. There was one building, however, more applicable for comparison with the one proposed to be built for the society, and that was the new offices being erected for the Colonial Secretary and the Minister for Works. No one would deny the stability and the beauty of the structure, and it presented all the characteristics that the building for the society would present. It had three frontages extending to 160 feet; it was 55 feet in height; it had five stories, and eighty-four rooms—five of them as large as 50 x 30; the whole of the inner walls were of brick, and they were plastered; and the building would accommodate a staff of 400 people. It was computed that when the building was completed and ready for occupation by the two departments the cost would be £120,000. The staff of the society he had ascertained was at present between thirty and forty, and it was explained to him that the work was increasing so fast that an addition to the staff was absolutely necessary. His only object in moving his motion was to caution. There should be no waste—(applause)—and it seemed to him taking the directors' figures and the character of the design for the new building that there was some superfluous work proposed. It would be well to pause. He could not see that there need be any very great hurry in going on with the contract, and he thought it would be advantageous to everyone if the gentlemen he had named would meet the Board, and consider the matter with them. If it were found that the work would cost £100,000 it must be done, but the society should not rashly go on with a work that hereafter might be regretted. (Applause.)

Mr. T. A. DIBBS seconded the resolution, and hoped the directors would acquit both Mr. Mullens and himself of any desire either to censure them or tobstruct the business. He had had some little acquaintance with the erection of buildings in this city, and he had invariably found that the cost exceeded by 10 per cent. the estimate of the architect. In this instance he was satisfied that £70,000 would be nearer the mark than £64,000, and he believed it would cost the society £80,000 before these buildings were in occupation. Referring to other buildings in this city, there was the Bank of New South Wales, where 110 officers were accommodated, while the society had only thirty-two officers. Surely it would be possible to alter the present building so as to make it comfortable for even sixty-four officers. (Applause.) The Commercial Bank had fifty-four officers all on the ground-floor, and he was satisfied that if the business of the Bank were ten times as great it could all be done there; and if the business of the society increased ten times they could still give accommodation for all the officers in the present building. Then again, if they erected this building they would have to erect five or six others, in the capitals of the other colonies, and a quarter of their invested funds would be put into bricks and mortar. It would deprive the society of £250,000 of revenue. (Cheers.)

The CHAIRMAN desired to say one or two words regarding the attitude of the directors in reference to this matter. The directors did not find themselves able to approve of this committee, but they intended to leave it in the hands of the meeting. (Hear, hear.) The day seemed rather late for a committee. When he told them in September, 1874, that they had bought the land, and that they intended to build upon it, he said they would be glad if the members would give them an informal sanction. They got that, because there was no objection taken, and they felt at liberty to go on. But even then the members might have interposed at the last annual meeting. He was desirous that a committee should have been appointed at that time; he would have been glad to have shared the responsibility with a committee of members, although the by-laws lay the responsibility entirely upon the directors. At that meeting he told them the directors had taken a contract for the foundation for £5000; that, he thought, would have been the time for a committee, but it was rather late in the day now, when that contract was finished, and they had decided upon the elevation. It was no doubt a serious undertaking, and no one regretted the price more than the directors did. Since they first took action prices had gone up, and the hours of labour had been shortened; making, as the architect told them, a difference of 20 per cent. But, after all, the society could well afford a handsome expenditure for their office, though not, of course, to have anything wasteful (Hear, hear.) The society, he believed, overtopped every other British society, as regards its new business. He thought, if they allowed for the price of their present building, about one-tenth part of their annual income would pay for the whole thing. With regard to all the buildings that Mr. Mullens had spoken of, the contracts were taken in cheaper times. As he had said, the direct re did not intend to oppose this committee, but leave it entirely in the hands of the members, and he trusted that the committee, if appointed, would go into the matter in a friendly spirit. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. HUNT inquired if the plans were ready to be tendered for.

The CHAIRMAN said they were not so far advanced as that.

Mr. MANSFIELD desired to correct the impression that the foundations had been put in without knowing what was to be put on the top of them. There were plans now in his office showing all the general principles of the building, leaving only the details to be settled afterwards. He denied that he had over-estimated the cost, as might be inferred from some remarks that had been made. At the same time he pleaded guilty to having estimated the full cost, so that there might be no over charges or afterclaps. The buildings that had been referred to scarcely offered a fair criterion as to the cost of this. The Commercial Bank was the only pertinent illustration, and that cost £60,000; somewhat less than the new building of the society was estimated to cost.

Mr. G. GUTCHRIST desired information respecting several items in the balance-sheet. The bal nce of receipts over disbursements showed £1036 more than the balance of last year, but the item did not show where the profit was. With regard to the buildings at Brisbane and Wellington, he thought the plans and estimates should be submitted to the members before such liabilities were incurred. He noticed a large item for commissions, showing an increase under this head. Then there was a large item for salaries, but he did not object to the salaries being increased so long as the business increased; but there was an item of £1355, for supernumerary clerks. The travelling expenses were £300 more than last year. He would like some explanation with regard to the item of £12,156 for freehold at Brisbane, and also with respect to the item for furniture. He would also like to have some information about the agents' balances, £24,250, and the outstanding premiums.

The CHAIRMAN said that the item of £12,000, for freehold at Brisbane, no doubt did require an explanation. It was really a good purchase. They had bought several houses upon this land; in fact, they had to buy the whole block. They would build upon a portion of the land, and sell the remainder, and it was a very good speculation for the society. The office furniture was partly for the office in Brisbane and partly for the head office. With regard to the agents' balances, it was not money that they had in their hands, but represented premiums within the days of grace. The outstanding premiums came within the same category, and they had all been paid since. With regard to the expenses, although the total had increased, the proportion had diminished by one per cent.

Mr. G. H. REID thought the chairman and his brother directors must look forward with lively pleasure to their annual interview with the members of the society. After their arduous labours to promote its interests, they must be delighted with the warmth and gratitude that greeted them. But on the present occasion they had not been so fortunate. With regard to Mr. Mullens's proposals, he had heard that gentleman's remarks with a great deal of interest, but he found that Mr. Mullens had brought forward a string of Parliamentary questions every one of which seemed to be intended to spring a mine upon the unfortunate directors; but the unkindest cut of all was to appoint a committee of six gentlemen in order to examine the action of the Board in reference to the building of the new premises. Mr. Mullens might say and believe that he did not intend to cast the slightest censure upon the Board, but he could conceive of no censure more direct than that which was contained in his motion. The gist of the whole argument he brought forward was that there was some extraordinary difference between the value of money got in other cases, and the value we were to get in this case. He believed the majority of the members had sufficient confidence in the Board of Directors to believe that, having arrived at a plan which they considered necessary for the requirements of the society, they would take care that there was no extravagance in carrying out the project. He believed that when the directors had arrived at the conclusion that a certain building was necessary for the society, the least the members could do was to approach the subject in a spirit of confidence. (Hear, hear.) No one could look at the progress of the society without believing that the directors had shown a wise spirit of enterprise. A few years ago, when the project to erect the present building was brought forward, a good deal of alarm was expressed. The directors at that time reported that there were 443 new policies issued during the previous year. Last year there were 4400 new policies. There was an increase in fifteen years—[A voice: "What about the deaths and surrenders?] He did not know, but he was determined not to surrender upon that point until he was compelled. (Cheers and laughter.) The total risk then was £110,000, and they had assets only representing £75,000—a proportion of 8 per cent. of assets as against risks. Now, although the risks were 9 millions, the assets had increased to £1,700,000—over 18 per cent. of the risk. That showed that the growth of the society in point of business had been a growth in point of security and assets, and that growth was only the growth of a greater growth. Then the present building was worth £20,000,—he did not know but what he might say £5,000. Put that against the £60,000 and they would have £40,000 left. He could quite understand gentlemen who were commencing business, and whose prospects were doubtful, building for their actual necessities, but men who had made a splendid business, which was rapidly increasing, built on a different principle—they looked to the future. In the present case, having confidence in the directors, knowing they were men who whilst studying ornament and architecture would be guilty of no extravagance, their proposition should be received with confidence, and the building would be a better advertisement than all the evanescent puffs in the world. Any one who paid the slightest regard to the position and the future of the society, who had the slightest idea of the value of landed property in the city, would see that the proposal for the new building, instead of being some chimerical expenditure which the society should shrink from, would be one of the wisest investments that could be made.

Mr. SLOPER pointed out that Mr. Mullens' proposition was one that in no way reflected upon the directors. (Hear, hear.) The case for consideration, however, was a serious one, and if the present building used by the society could be utilised, it would be prudent to utilise it instead of incurring a vast expenditure on a new building. It was only what sensible men would do to reason together, and the appointment of a committee such as that proposed, he thought, would be beneficial.

Mr. G. KING said that if the building could be put up for £30,000 the society was not justified in spending more. The question was simply, could they put up a building in which the business of the society could be carried on for £30,000 or £35,000. If that could be done, then the directors were not justified in spending £64,000.

Mr. HUNT: It can be done.

Mr. JOHN WOODS thought it was wise to appoint the committee so as to prevent the erection of a building which in a few years might be insufficient for the business of the society—a mistake that had occurred in the case of the building now occupied.

Mr. HENRY said that in 1860, when the question of a new building was considered, the sum proposed to defray the cost was £600, but the real cost of the building was about £14,000, and he had pointed out in regard to the building now proposed to be erected that it would cost double the estimate of £30,000. He believed the erection of the new building would be a mistake. The building would be out of the town. The land should have been bought between Market-street and Bathurst-street. Let the land which had been purchased and the foundations be sold. The society would lose nothing.

The Hon. A. CAMPBELL suggested that the last paragraph of the resolution be omitted, because if the meeting consented to the appointment of six gentlemen to act as directors, it might fairly leave the matter in their hands, and not have it referred back again to the members. He was entirely responsible for recommending the purchase of the land on which the new building was being erected, and the purchase was effected through his individual influence at a much less price than the land was worth. (Nonsense.) If there was any difficulty on that point he would be glad to take the land off the hands of the society at what it cost them. (Applause.) The land was selected with due regard to the value it would be to the society. At the time it was purchased it had a value to the society which no other land in the city could have. The society could not afford to go up King-street—(laughter)—without losing much of their business. When it was found that other offices were being opened near to the office of the society, it was felt to be necessary to purchase land within a convenient distance. The foundations could be taken off the hands of the society; but he hoped the members would think well of the matter before they parted with the land and the foundations. The matter might fairly be left with the committee and the directors when the committee was appointed.

Mr. THOMAS ROWE suggested that the name of Mr. T. A. Dibbs should be placed on the committee.

The CHAIRMAN pointed out that the name must be proposed in substitution for another, as the proposition already made was to appoint a number of members equal to the number of the directors.

M. T. A. DIBBS declined to be placed on the committee.

Mr. ROWE thought the site for the new building totally unsuitable, for in less than ten years that part of the city would be something like Miller's Point. He believed Mr. Mansfield had overestimated the cost of the building. That gentleman had been fortunate enough to be selected by the Board. He did not blame the Board for that, but he did for having treated some gentlemen with disrespect. He thought the building had been overrated, and it would not be so handsome a design as some members expected. There was not one new feature in the whole building, and it would not, therefore, be any great honour from an architectural point of view. There had been magnificent buildings produced here for a comparatively small amount of money, and he was at a loss to know where £60,000 would go in the building to be erected for the society. It was unfair to compare a rough warehouse with the offices for the society; but still he could not see where £60,000 would go in the building. The position of the building was not a proper one. The society should go into the centre of the city.

Mr. G. R. DIBBS said that the Board viewed the motion moved by Mr. Mullens in no other way than as a desire, on his part, to do what the directors had endeavoured to do—their best in the interests of the society. Giving an individual opinion upon this matter, he believed the directors had made a mistake. He thought they went into the purchase of the land too hastily. But they had considered the purchase a good one, and he considered it so to-day, and one that the society could realise upon at a good profit. The estimate of a building was rarely the same as the actual cost, and though the estimate of the architect was £64,000, it might fairly be considered that with the loss of interest the cost of the building would be £70,000. He thought the directors might retrace their steps. He was prepared to admit—without appearing to differ from the Board—that they had made a mistake in venturing into an expenditure of £70,000 at the present stage of the society's existence. The society was young. If in ten years time the business of the society greatly increased, and the staff of officers became much larger than it was now, then an expenditure of £70,000 might fairly be gone into; but until that was the case it might wisely be shown by the members that such an expenditure was not in accordance with the size of the society. The success of the Mutual Provident Society in this and the neighbouring colonies had been the means of forcing a large amount of competition. But he believed the day was not far distant when this society would reorganise its prospectus, and invite people to join its ranks, merely pointing to its success, its reserve fund, and the healthy position it had aspired to and attained. The society had issued 4000 new policies this year, but there was a point Mr. Reid overlooked, and it was that with the issue of these new policies the society incurred new liabilities, which it would have to meet some day, and unless it were guarded in its expenditure those liabilities would not be met. The first idea of the directors was to erect a building at the cost of £40,000, land included. Now an increase had been made in the price, and an expenditure of £64,000 was asked for. No Board, he thought, could take a resolution asking them to reconsider a question as a censure. He thought the thanks of the society were due to Mr. Mullens for the stand he had taken in this matter—(applause)—and though he should prefer to have seen Mr. Mullens put a limit on the cost of the building, he would not vote against the committee. He was prepared to retrace the steps the directors had taken, and if with the expenditure of £4000 or £5000 sufficient increased accommodation in the present offices could be secured, he was prepared to remain there for the next ten years rather than put a millstone round the neck of the society which, twenty years hence, might be regretted.

The CHAIRMAN would like to say that, although he was sorry for the large amount, he did not think there was any mistake in it, and the members seemed to lose sight of the fact that they would let a large portion of it. They would let the basement, and part of the first and second floors. Members seemed to be running away with the idea that the society was to charge itself with the interest on the whole of the expenditure. And he believed the old building would sell very well.

Mr. MULLENS said he was quite willing to withdraw the last paragraph of his resolution

General Post Office, Sydney, 24th April, 1876.

CUSTOM HOUSE.—Entered Outwards, April 26: Victoria (s.), 978 tons, Captain Lake, for Cooktown, via Queensland ports.

The Diamantina (s.) crossed the Manning bar at 10.30 a.m. on the 25th instant, and had light southerly winds and fine weather throughout the passage, arriving at Sydney Heads at 10 a.m. on the 26th. Passed the steamer Dalkim in the Manning bight, and the steamer Clitlyn off the Seal Rocks, both vessels bound North. The following vessels were lying at the bar when the Diamantina left:—Mr. M'Culloch's new schooner Bismarck, Clara Crawford, Ino, Combs, and Maggie Gollan. The Avalon left in company. The cargo of the Diamantina comprises: 1054 bags maize, 50 bags barley, 79 bags flour, 23 coops poultry, 21 cases eggs, 2 casks oranges, 5 bundles tobacco, 59 hides, 98 pigs, one horse, 48 bags oysters, 109 pieces cedar, and sundries.

The Agnes Irving (s.) left Grafton at noon on April 24, crossed the Bar at 7 a.m. on the 24th instant, and arrived in Sydney at 3.30 p.m. on the 26th instant. She experienced light variable winds, with fine weather, to Broken Bay thence to Sydney strong southerly breezes. Her cargo consists of 1630 bags maize, 34 bales wool, 127 hides, 127 bunches bananas, 7 coops fowls, 13 cases eggs, 8 casks tallow, 10 bags horns, 6 horses, 23 bags oysters, and sundries.

The s. s. City of Melbourne left Sandridge railway pier at 3.45 p.m. 24th, cleared the Heads at 6.10 p.m., passed Wilson's Promontory at 2.30 a.m. 25th, and rounded Gabo Island at 7 p.m. same day; passed Montague Island at 2 a.m. 26th, passed Cape St. George at 8.20 a.m., and entered the Heads at 3 p.m. same day. Experienced light variable winds to Wilson's Promontory, thence moderate and light S.W. winds to Gabo Island, thence moderate N.W., northerly, and N.E. winds to Cape St. George, thence moderate S.W. breeze until arrival, making the passage from wharf to wharf in 47 hours. Passed the barquentine Smiling Morn off Cape Everard at 3.30 p.m. on the 25th, working to the southward.

The favourite trader Alexander Duthie, running between this port and London arrived yesterday, under the command of Captain Murray, and it is needless to say that she has as usual arrived in first-class order. She has on board four valuable horses, all having arrived in splendid condition—reflecting much credit to those in charge. The Alexander Duthie took her departure from St. Agnes Light on the 4th February, with moderate westerly winds; got the S.E. trades on 18th February in latitude 23-49 N., they proved light and variable and were lost in latitude 3-30 N. The Equator was crossed in longitude 25-22 W. on 1st March, and she picked up the S.E. trades on the 4th March in latitude 3-8 S., and they prevailed well to the eastward throughout, finally being disposed of on the 14th March in latitude 29-4 S. and longitude 31-8 W. The meridian of the Cape of Good Hope was passed on 24th March in latitude 43-23 S., and the ship made her casting on a mean parallel of 41° S., westerly winds prevailing. The S.W. Cape of Tasmania was rounded on the 21st April, and since then light and variable weather has prevailed.

The Alexander Duthie reports the following vessels as being communicated with:—March 10, Countess Kintore, London to New Zealand, in latitude 23-5 S., longitude 30-56 W. she had emigrants on board, and three deaths had occurred from measles. On the 1st April, in latitude 42-20 S., longitude 52-39 E., spoke the ship Arundel Castle, from Plymouth to Adelaide.

The barque Strathdon, so well known in the trade between this port and London, arrived last night, having made an excellent run from the Start Point of 81 days. She cleared the Channel with light N.W. winds, and fell in with the N.E. trades in latitude 23° N.: they proved light and variable, and were finally dispensed with in latitude 5° N. The Equator was crossed on the 22th day out in longitude 23-30 W. The S.E. trades having been picked up in latitude 1° N. were carried to 24° S., but they only proved moderate in force. The meridian of the Cape of Good Hope was passed on the 24th March, and she ran her casting down on a mean parallel of latitude 44° S. carrying heavy westerly breezes. She came south of Tasmania, the S. W. Cape being rounded on 20th April during a violent S.W. gale, which died away as the ship came north, and from Cape Howe moderate winds have prevailed.

A propeller screw, singularly original in structure and theory, has been invented by Dr. J. Collis Browne. It is four-bladed, but it would be impossible to convey an idea of the shape of the blades without diagrams. The effect produced by its revolutions is to eject a rope of water, which is thrown out at right angles in the direction propelled, by which means a maximum pressure is obtained upon the water displaced by the propeller. The direct action of this screw practically serves as a rudder—that is, if the helm is lashed amidships, the vessel will take a straight course, and pursue that course without swerving by so much as the fraction of a point, though she be running athwart a current of any velocity. Further, it has been shown by repeated experiments that this propeller will stop a vessel in her own length, the counter-action being precisely synonymous with the direct action.—Argus.

LOSS OF LIFE AT SEA.—A report prepared by the Permanent Secretary of the Board of Trade shows that the loss of lives in British merchant ships for the three years 1870-72 comprised 5531 of crews and 355 passengers, making together 5916, or an average of nearly 2000 a year. If we look some years further back, halfway towards the beginning of this century, we find that the above is about twice the average annual number reported lost in the three years 1854-56. But the mercantile tonnage of the British Empire has increased from 2,783,761 in 1855 to 7,391,230 in 1873, or nearly threefold; and the entrances and clearances (i.e., voyages) of British ships in the foreign trade of the United Kingdom have increased from 3,061,628 in 1858 to 29,647,344 in 1873, or nearly sixfold. Therefore there is reason to believe that the loss of seamen's lives in British ships is now much less in proportion to the trade than it was 40 years ago.—Times, February 22.

£500, to be recovered by any person who shall sue for the same in the Supreme Court of New South Wales." If the framers of the Constitution, following the example of English statesmen, had not deemed the danger one that should be carefully guarded against they would never have provided for it such a penalty. It is quite possible that men are to be found sufficiently pure to be Government contractors without sacrificing their independence, or giving a corrupt vote in Parliament. But even then their purity will be all the safer, and the public welfare all the more secure, for being delivered from such a temptation. There is no darker page in English history than that which records how Parliament was corrupted by the gift of monopolies and other forms of royal patronage in the days of the STUARTS. There was no more potent and immediate cause of the recent misfortunes of France than the peculation and corruption which had invaded every department of the State and every form of public life; and when NAPOLEON'S eyes were opened to it at Sedan he might well cry in the bitterness of his despair, "How they have deceived me." The one great trial of the free institutions of the United States is the municipal, legislative, and official chicanery which is the greatest stain on the flag of the great Republic. From STUART tyranny and from the usurpations of Cæsarism we are happily secure; but the political atmosphere is not so much purer here than elsewhere as to enable us safely to relax any of the constitutional safeguards against the necessities of needy adventurers and the possibility of official infidelity. Either these clauses ought to be removed from the Constitution Act—an alternative which nobody will recommend—or they ought to be strictly enforced and faithfully observed, and the constituencies ought to lend their utmost support towards preserving that purity of Government that the constitutional safeguards were intended to secure. It is in vain that laws are framed, if the people do not work those laws in the spirit of them. It is to the people in the last resort that the destinies of the country are committed. And there is the more need of their jealous vigilance, because the danger is neither little nor imaginary. In proportion to population our Government is one of the largest employers of labour, and one of the largest contractors, to be found in any community, and for many years to come will be a larger employer than ever, and its works will be more extensive than ever before, and possibly more remunerative to contractors. Under such circumstances the competition among contractors will be severe, and it will not be for the public good to permit the possibility of a contract buying a vote for the Government of the day.

There is one feature in the recent Parramatta election worthy of notice. Mr. TAYLOR has been returned by 455 votes. His opponent polled 397, so that altogether only 852 electors recorded their opinions. The total number on the roll for the electorate is about 1500, and these send two members to Parliament. The total number of electors on the rolls for the whole colony is about 175,000, and, according to the average for the whole 72 members of the Assembly, the constituency of Parramatta ought to number nearly 5000 electors to justify its claim to one-thirty sixth part of the voting power of the Assembly. Do the electors of this favoured constituency use their power so much more patriotically and intelligently than other constituencies that they should retain possession of this monopoly?

Mr. BRIGHT once expressed his thanks to the noble lord whose property included also the pocket borough of Colne for having sent to Parliament so able a man as Mr. ROBERT LOWE, when he might as easily have sent in his valet instead. Parramatta has sent some good men to Macquarie-street, and it is to be hoped will send many more, but she may be none the less likely to do this for the reminder that "where much is given, much will be required," and that in the redistribution of seats, which is no very distant probability, she will have to make out a good claim to public gratitude to retain two members for so small a constituency.

THE COLONIAL TREASURER'S motion that the House should resolve itself into committee this day, to take the new banking agreement into consideration, was discussed yesterday in a rather rambling manner. The desire of the Government, as expressed last week, was that the question should be treated in committee, where there would be better opportunities for full criticism and explanation. Mr. STUART, accordingly, in introducing the motion confined himself to comparatively few and brief remarks, indicating the principles by which he had been guided in making the agreement. He had considered that the first thing to be secured was the convenience and advantage of the Government, in the management of the public banking business (and this would be achieved by keeping the working account with a single bank instead of a competition); and the second was that the financial interests and trading transactions of the public should be exposed to the smallest risk of disturbance (and that end would be gained by distributing the accumulated surplus). He also stated the reasons why he had made the agreement subject to disallowance by Parliament instead of subject to approval. Such a contingency as an unforeseen dissolution might in the latter case leave the colony without an agreement, whilst the course taken would provide against the inconvenience and loss that would have been so occasioned. Mr. PARKES admitted the greater convenience of taking the discussion in committee, on the understanding that it should not be restricted by the close application of rules of debate; and the Government at once accepted that understanding, whilst it was explained that the committee would be free to deal with the agreement in its details, though, of course, if it were varied, it would no longer be binding upon the Bank of New South Wales. In Mr. PARNELL'S hands, however, the discussion took a different turn. Without making any motion, the hon. member took exception to the action of the Government throughout. The agreement should have been made subject to approval, and should have been followed by a motion for approval; but as it had been made subject to disallowance, the Government was going out of its way to make any further movement in the matter, unless it desired to shirk its responsibility by getting the House to make amendments. He expressed his disapproval of the agreement in several points; but the main drift of his argument was to show that the Government had bungled the whole matter. Mr. DIBBS supported Mr. PARNELL'S opinions upon that point, and then addressed himself to the question of the merits, or rather demerits, of the agreement, travelling, in doing so, over a portion of the ground which he traversed last week. Mr. STUART, in reply, passed by Mr. PARNELL'S arguments, and then taking up some of the more prominent of Mr. DIBBS'S assertions, both as to matters of fact and the interpretation of documents, sifted them in so effectual a manner as to justify the course suggested in proposing the thorough examination of the whole matter in committee. The endeavour to avoid a double debate was unsuccessful, but the motion was carried without a division.

SUPREME COURT.—Business This Day.—Master's Office, at 10.30 a.m.: Goodlet and another v. Fowler, to consider decree. At 11 a.m.: Maddock and others v. Barnett, adjourned evidence in reply.

THE VACANT JUDGESHIP.—The question of filling up the vacancy on the Bench of the Supreme Court, caused by the death of Mr. Justice Cheeke, has been under the special consideration of the Government during the last day or two. Although the Government does not wish to be deprived of the services of their Attorney-General, we believe that it was intimated to that gentleman, at a meeting of the Cabinet, held yesterday, that if he desired to accept the office his appointment would meet with the approval of his colleagues. Mr. Dalley, we understand, declined the honour, stating that he did not wish to leave his colleagues. At the same time, he submitted the name of Sir William Manning. We believe that the recommendation was accepted by the Cabinet, and that the acceptance of the office has been offered to that gentleman.

SHIPMENT OF FROZEN MEATS.—The hon. secretaries state that the committee have resolved to call in the promised moneys, and that circulars to that effect are now being issued. It is expected that all preparatory works will be finished in a very short time; and as funds for the purchase of stock will then be required, it is desirable, by having the money in hand, to prevent any chance of delay. It is intended to expect none but the very finest samples of Australian meat, and thus to establish the trade on a secure basis. This is the more important, because the beef that is weekly shipped to England from America, under what is known as the cold process, is said to be most of a superior kind.

NO. 10 BATTERY V. A.—On Tuesday evening, after drill, the corps was marched to the Brigade Office for the purpose of presenting staff-sergeant John Griffith with an illuminated address and a purse of sovereigns, as an expression of the appreciation of his services as a drill instructor to the corps. Captain Macdonald, in a very complimentary speech, presented the testimonial to the recipient, who responded in suitable terms.

LECTURE AT WOOLLAHRA.—In Ocean-street Congregational Church, on Monday evening last, Mr. J. V. Barnard (Mayor of Woollahra) in the chair, a lecture was delivered by the Rev. Dr. Gilchrist on "The Life and Work of William III., Prince of Orange." There was a good attendance. Dr. Gilchrist handled the subject with great ability and eloquence, speaking for nearly two hours in a way which chained the attention of the audience.

THE NEW SOUTH WALES COURSING CLUB.—The nominations for the president's Cup promise a very successful meeting, though the ground is hard at present. In Bathurst there is said to be more excitement about it than the races, and there are no less than four local dogs entered. Queensland sends one and Victoria two. The nominators are the Hon. E. K. Cox, Messrs. E. De Mestre, W. Lee, J. Lee, J. Carpenter, James Lee, W. Hill, J. Collier, W. R. Hill, W. M'Quade, W. M'Quade, jun., — M'Quade, jun., A. Gee, A. Thompson, J. Weir, W. Langley, G. Hill, A. Thompson, A. H. Gardiner. It is proposed to run the card through twice on the first day—that is to say, the first ties will be run off.

THE AUSTRALIAN JOCKEY CLUB.—Owners, breeders, and others interested are reminded that nominations for the A. J. C. youngsters' races will close to-day.

BARON MUELLER'S FRAGMENTA, AND DESCRIPTIVE NOTES OF PAPUAN PLANTS.—Baron Mueller has just published another number of his work on Australian Plants, and also the second part of his descriptive notes on specimens from New Guinea. With regard to the first publication, great credit is due to the liberality of the Hon. T. Elder, who sent out Mr. Young for the express purpose of collecting specimens. Many new plants have been discovered by that enterprising traveller, and the present number of the Fragmenta bears testimony to his exertions in bringing to light various species, which had previously been unknown to the scientific world. Three new species of leguminous plants (Cassia cardiosperma, Jacksonia nematoclada, and Lonchopsis canescens), one species of Euphorbiaceæ (Monotaxis luteiflora), and several myrtaceous and composite species, have been described from Mr. Young's specimens. To these descriptions are added some interesting remarks on plants found by Mr. Dempster, particularly on the new genus Depremesnilia, which, according to the Baron, differs from all other known Labiates. After describing some new species of Casuarina, Adenochilus Nortoni (so named out of respect to Mr. James Norton, the discoverer of it), is honourably mentioned as being elegantly figured amongst Mr. Fitzgerald's Australian orchids. This plant was found by Mr. Norton near Mount Victoria, and it resembles some species of Caladenia. It is interesting, as connecting the orchids of New Zealand with those of Australia, A. gracilis being indigenous in the former country. From Mr. Fitzgerald's figures, also, the Baron recognizes Diuris æqualis as a species distinct from D. maculata. This plant was regarded by Mr. Bentham as a mere variety (Fl. Aust., 6 vol., 328), but that learned writer candidly admits the difficulty of describing some species of orchids from dried specimens, and he expresses a hope that the revision of several genera may be taken up by resident botanists, who have an opportunity of studying them in a fresh state. His wishes are now being carried out by the figures of Mr. Fitzgerald and the description of Baron Mueller. . . . The principal material for the descriptive notes on Papuan plants is derived from the specimens placed at the disposal of the Baron by the Rev. S. Macfarlane, who some months since explored the Baxter and Fly River in New Guinea for the purpose of endeavouring to convey the blessings of Christianity amongst the natives of that island. It appears that vegetation in the south-eastern part of New Guinea, so far as yet observed, assumes a very different aspect from that of the north-west. Sundaic forms seem to predominate in the regions facing the Moluccas and Philippine Islands, whilst in the south-east pure Australian forms are in a limited degree mixed into Malayan vegetation, which latter flourishes also extensively in northern and in tropical eastern Australia. Banksia, acacia, and eucalyptus, which occur on the south-eastern regions, establish a close alliance between the vegetation of New Guinea and Australia; but until further exploration shall have taken place, we have no means of ascertaining how far this somewhat enigmatic distribution is due to geological considerations. Amongst the plants now brought to notice, some are identical with Australian species, and others with those of the Oriental archipelago—Macaranga aleuritoides of the Euphorbiaceæ, Spermacoce Papuana of the Rubiaceæ, and Dendrobium Macfarlani, appear to be new; Coix lacryma Jobi (the grass called "Job's tears") occurs on the Upper Fly River, and from the list compiled from various sources, New Guinea seems to be rich in orchids and in species of Sapendaceæ. The ferns of the present collection are Schizoea dichotoma, Adiantum hispidulum, Grammitis pinnatu, and Davallia flaccida, all of which are common to Australia. Several species of Asplenium and Aspidium are reported to be new, but the Baron thinks that they require final identification before it can be determined whether they are really distinct from known species. As the Rev. S. Macfarlane has declared his intention of securing new material for elucidating the Papuan flora, we may hope that ere long the vegetation of New Guinea will cease to be a mystery; and that, by a comparison with the flora of the adjacent islands and continents, it may be ascertained how many of the species are really peculiar to New Guinea, and how many are common to other countries. It is certainly to the honour of Australia that through the praiseworthy exertions of Baron Mueller, this country is permitted to take a leading part in the investigation, and to make known throughout the civilized world "the vegetable products — some, perhaps, of undreamed value—which emanate from the secluded main-haunts of the birds of paradise." In commenting on the plants of New Guinea, the Baron has collected much information from Dr. Scheffer's essay on Mr. Sycemann's specimens gathered at the north-west coast, and also from the volume published by Achille Richard, from 1832 to 1834, on the Botanic collections secured during the voyages of Admiral Jules Dumont d'Urville, in the corvette Astrolabe. The French and Dutch naturalists have made many discoveries in New Guinea, but as their works are not accessible to the general reader, Baron Mueller's abstract of their labours is very acceptable; and, combined with the descriptions of plants recently collected, it gives a general view of all that is known of Papuan Botany. Dr. Beccari, of whom the Baron speaks in the highest terms, has contributed his share to the present work, and his recent discovery of an Araucaria on Mount Arfak is a fact highly interesting and suggestive.

NAVIGATION OF THE CLARENCE RIVER.—As the Clarence River settlers cannot have a railway, it is but just that the river which drains so fertile a region should have no impediment in its navigation. At a meeting lately held in Grafton it was decided that a petition to the Legislative Assembly should be prepared, praying for relief from the obstructions in the navigation of the Clarence River.

SMITH'S COMBINATION COMPANY. — This company of performers, now playing at the School of Arts, attracted a very fair audience last evening. Mr. Smith's combination consists of Herr Tolmaque, with Messrs. Charles Addison, L. Lenton, P. Willard, and J. Moran, also Monsieur de Croix and Mdlle. Nartiui, who all appeared last evening in a very varied entertainment, which was greatly appreciated, that is, judging from the applause bestowed upon each artist. The greatest sensation was M. de Croix's performance on an invisible wire; but, as before mentioned, the fireworks, display had better be omitted from the programme, as it seems to be dangerous.

THE CIRCUS.—An afternoon performance of Wilson's Palace Circus was given yesterday in the monster tent recently erected at the Haymarket. A large audience assembled to witness the various feats of horsemanship, &c., and at night the seats were again filled.

HEWITT V. DAVIES.—The three events which are to settle the relative merits of the above pedestrians will come off on Monday next, at the Albert Ground, Redfern, and, judging from the interest excited by the match in sporting circles, there is likely to be a large attendance of the public. In addition to the stake of £400, the receipts at the gate are to go to the winner; and the distances have been fixed at 100, 150, and 130 yards, to be run off in the order named. Referees are to be appointed on the ground, and, as the arrangement of preliminaries has been placed in the hands of gentlemen well known in Sydney, the public have a guarantee of the bona fides of the coming contest. The American runner, F. Davies (of F. Davies' Store) is well supported; but there are many who pin their faith to the English runner, from his well-known performances in the colonies.

SALES OF BLOOD STOCK.—George Kiss reports having sold, at the Bazaar and on the Exhibition grounds, the following horses, since the 19th April:—At the Bazaar: For W. Tait—a chestnut colt by William Tell, £24. C. A. Campbell—4 colts by Yelverton, £69 6s. John Eales—a bay gelding, £24. S. W. Knight—a bay colt by Kingston, £34. W. J. Dangar—chestnut colt, His Excellency, £57 15s.; Doncaster, a grey yearling colt, £65 2s.; Hotspur, a bay yearling colt, £62 10s. J. Clift—a bay colt by Marlbyrnong, £39 15s. Mr. Chisholm—a chestnut pony, Chillion, £13 13s. A. Stewart—a bay gelding, £18. At the Exhibition yesterday, at Prince Alfred Park, the following horses: For J. S. Hughes — a chestnut thoroughbred horse,—105 guineas. Messrs. Anthony Brothers—chestnut horse, Zebra, 60 guineas. P. Mooney—Crown Prince, 65 guineas. Elam Squires—The Bachelor, grey colt, 115 guineas. W. Best—Captain George, bay gelding, 20 guineas. Josiah Stanton—Lady Emily, 2 years old, 20 guineas. Messrs. Hindmarsh—Young Cotherston, 300 guineas; Walter Lamb, 425 guineas. Edward Moore, jun., Thumper, bay draught colt, 110 guineas; Richmond, chestnut cart colt, 70 guineas; Active, cart colt, 65 guineas; Hero, cart colt, 110 guineas. John Jackson—Black Nigger, 60 guineas. William Chapman—Young Lofty, 55 guineas. Messrs. T. and S. Yeo—Bloomer, chestnut draught horse, 160 guineas. W. Archer—Bay filly, 60 guineas. Stephen Gow—Prince, 61 guineas. T. Greenhalgh—Speculation, chestnut stallion, 40 guineas. J. T. Gosper—Shakspeare, 300 guineas. T. Holland—Honest Tom, 190 guineas. W. Archer—Lord Bronte, pony gelding, 7 guineas. W. Lamb—Commodore Nut, Shetland pony, 10 guineas. T. Holland—Rock of Ages, dark grey draught stallion, 190 guineas.

DISPUTE AT THE MURRAY BRIDGE.—The work of constructing the new Murray bridge has (states the Riverina Herald) received a check by the seizure, by the New South Wales Government, of a large number of the piles used in the construction of the necessary staging. The cause of the seizure is an alleged breach of the New South Wales land law on the part of Messrs. Blair and M'Grouther, the contractors for the supply of the piles for the bridge. The land law prohibits the fencing of red gum timber of a less diameter than 18 inches, but in the specification of the the tenders of the above-named firm, 16 inches is the minimum of the diameter of the piles for the contract. Accordingly much of the timber supplied has been of the latter measurement, and this has led to the New South Wales forest ranger seizing two barge-loads of the piles, in all about a hundred, on the Moama side of the river, on Monday last. The piles in question, it is stated, had been cut in the Sydney territory, hence the officers' jurisdiction. The penalty for cutting undersized timber is £50, besides confiscation of the trees felled. Messrs. Blair and M'Grouther at once, upon receiving intimation of the seizure, wrote to the authorities at Sydney, calling attention to the exceptional circumstances of the case, and asking for the restitution of the piles. The occurrence has hindered the work of pile-driving, the seizure involving the whole of the available material, and should the New South Wales Government retain possession of the piles, an awkward delay is likely to occur in the progress of the bridge contract, as the timber under embargo will not be easily replaced.

ATTEMPT TO UPSET A RAILWAY ENGINE.—A deliberate attempt was made (says the Bendigo Independent) on the 15th instant, to throw the engine owned by the contractor of the Sandhurst and Inglewood Railway off the line at Dead Horse Gully. When on the return journey to the gravel-pits, the door at the bottom of one of the trucks by some means became unhinged and dropped off. The loss of the door was discovered, of course, when the truck was being filled, and a strict watch was kept all along the line by the engine-driver, who feared it might have fallen on the rails. Nothing could be seen of it, however, until after two trips had been made, when it was found lying directly over one rail of the line, placed behind a curve, in such a position that it could not be observed till the engine was within fifteen or twenty yards of the obstruction. The door was of wood, about two inches thick, and the driver being of course unable to stop the engine in time, the effect was that the tender jumped completely off the line, but, fortunately, the flanges fell again in their proper position on the rails. One of the axle-box pans was destroyed, and the works will be retarded until another can be procured.

A LONG TIME IN TRANSIT.—A curious instance of delay in the transit of a letter has come under the notice of the Albury Banner. It appears that the proprietor of the Banner about twelve months since had occasion to write to a correspondent at Ten-mile Creek with reference to some business transaction. The letter was duly dispatched on the 31st May, 1875, but as it happened to be of no particular importance the fact of no reply coming to hand did not give rise to any particular surprise, and in the course of time the matter was altogether forgotten. On the 17th instant, however, the writer received a letter from the person to whom the communication referred to had been addressed, stating that the missive had just come to hand, and inquiring what it was all about, as the recipient had forgotten all the circumstances to which it referred. Where the letter has been for the last twelve months it is impossible just now to say.

ENCOUNTER WITH AN EAGLE.—A fight with an eagle, remarks the Warrnambool Standard, should be somewhat of a novelty, but we can vouch for the veracity of the gentleman who supplies us with the following particulars of an adventure on Mount Shadwell:—For the double purpose of getting an appetite for his matutinal meal and obtaining a view of the surrounding country, the gentleman in question set forth at early morning for the summit of the mount, and in his progression up its sides he was attracted by a large bird which appeared high in air, gyrating and describing a variety of graceful evolutions, which the pedestrian paused at intervals to admire. As he ascended, the more apparent became the proximity of the bird, and its movements now struck him as being singular, if not suspicious, for in its sweep it was gradually lessening a circle which it had been performing round a point which the traveller was bent on attaining. The crown of the mount was at length reached by the pedestrian, who was no longer left in doubt as to the nature and intention of his feathery acquaintance. It was a large eagle, bent upon resenting the biped's intrusion upon his solitude. Swooping down it came, with the apparent purpose of bearing the pedestrian off to his eyrie, as in the famous story in the children's book, but the fortunate possession of a stout stick, with which the traveller laid about him vigorously, prevented such a dire consequence, presuming the inhabitant of the clouds to be capable of effecting his supposed intention. The eagle allowed himself to be struck at several times, but at length gave up the combat and retired, much to the relief of the gentleman, who had got rather more diversion than he had anticipated, or indeed, than he desired, during his morning's exercise.

SERICULTURE.—Mrs. M'Dougall, the sericulturist, of Spring Bank, Winton, has (says the Ovens and Murray Advertiser) received the following letter from Mr. T. V. Kelly, the English Consul at Milan:—"Alberto Reale, Milan, January 14, 1876. Dear Madam,—I am in receipt of your letter of the 2nd November last, requesting me to give you some information respecting the Victorian grain you entrusted to Mrs. Bladen Neill. When that lady left Milan for England, in June of last year, she deposited with me 55 ounces of grain, four of which were cultivated in the autumn season with some success. I have therefore in hand 51 ounces of grain, which will, probably, be that to which you refer. I have been requested by Mrs. Neill to find a purchaser or purchasers for these 51 ounces, and as the season for sales is approaching I shall, no doubt, be able to place it advantageously; although greater confidence will be felt by purchasers when they are able, from experience, to judge of the result. My own opinion is that the reproduction in Victoria of M. Roland's grain has been a great success; the cocoons are much admired here. Prices for pierced cocoons (first quality) are quoted to day at 6 francs 50 centimes the kilogram, and desiccated cocoons (first quality) 12 francs the kilogram; they would both meet with ready sale here. With regard to packing, that is, as a rule, done in bales of coarse fibre; it is, however, advisable to add an inside covering of some common thin oil-cloth or skin. The greatest possible precaution must be taken in shipping the cocoons dry; the chrysalis must also be so; should this not be the case, they would suffer on the voyage. In order to reduce the bulk, any amount of pressure, even hydraulic pressure, may be employed, provided the cocoons be dry; the cocoon expands and opens again freely when immersed in water. I addressed a letter to Mrs. Grover, of Melbourne, on the 12th of May last, in which I said, 'By once establishing here a decided superiority in Victorian grain-and-cocoons, the demand would, no doubt, exceed the supply, at least for the present. Should such a fortunate result be obtained, it would, of course, be highly important for the future prosperity of the company that a very careful selection of both should be made for shipment to this place.' Cocoons of even an inferior quality will find a sale here, but an estimate of prices cannot now be given. Should you decide on sending cocoons here, I shall be happy to act as your agent at Milan, and will do my best to serve your interests.—I am, dear madam, yours very faithfully, THOS. V. KELLY, English Consul."

AN EXCITING KANGAROO FIGHT.—The Port Pirie correspondent of the South Australian Register sends the following description of an "old man" kangaroo:—Mr. Warren, farmer, of this place, when out driving, fell in with a kangaroo, which was determined not to stand any practical joking without resisting it. Directly he was seen the only dog with the party—fleet of foot and a sure killer—was sent for him, but the indignant marsupial refused to budge, and went for the dog, chasing him for nearly 100 yards. Eventually they got into fighting quarters, and, as the dog appeared likely to get the worst of it, Mr. Warren got out of his buggy to render assistance, but the kangaroo was equal to the occasion, for he left the dog and made at the man, who deemed it prudent to retire. There being nothing but rotten wood about, he got into the buggy again, and drove the trap straight at the animal, using the pole as a battering-ram, and struck him fairly in the breast. This knocked him over, and the horses and wheels passed over him. Even then he rose again, and was eager for the fray, but "Spring," with some assistance, went in and placed him hors de combat, after a tussle or two. The tail weighed 15 lbs., and its owner stood over 6 feet high, and was dark-coloured.

MURDER OF AN ABORIGINAL.—At the Clermont police court, on April 10, Frederick Wheeler, late sub-inspector of police, was brought up on remand, charged with the wilful murder of an aboriginal named Jemmy, at the Belyando Native Police Barracks. The Copperfield Miner states that the Bench considered the case was made out, and committed the prisoner to take his trial for wilful murder.

ADELAIDE.

WEDNESDAY.

At a banquet given to Ministers last evening at Wallaroo, Mr. Boucaut stated that the policy of the present Government was the extension of railways for the development of the interior, and to attach the important districts of Riverina; the construction of jetties to compete with Sydney and Melbourne in attracting large vessels, which do not at present visit the colony; free trade, which will place the merchants on an equal footing with those in other parts of the world; the imposition of stamp and succession duties, with a fair additional tax on the propertied classes, to enable the Government to keep the revenue up to the expenditure, meet the payment of interest, and the cost of introducing immigrants. Mr. Boucaut hopes that within the next five years the population will be increased by 100,000; and he also hopes that, if the railway proposals are carried out, in five years they will begin the construction of an intercolonial line via Mount Barker, and thus open the way to Melbourne and Sydney. He said that £2,600,000 were owing the Government for land, and this justified the proposed loan of £3,000,000.

Messrs. Giles and Smith's windmill, at West Torrens, was destroyed by fire this morning. It is insured for £2200.

Mr. G. F. Angas has given £750, and Mr. John Angas £250, towards the Inebriate Asylum fund, which, with the Government subsidy, now amounts to £6000.

H.M. schooner Conflict arrived this morning, from Western Australia.

THE INTERCOLONIAL EXHIBITION.

THE attendance on Wednesday, the second day of the Exhibition, was far beyond that of Tuesday, and, indeed, was as great, if not greater, than any one day on which the Exhibition has been open. Up to 7 o'clock upwards of £776 was taken at the gates, and this amount represents nearly 16,000 people. In addition, about 3150 children were admitted, and if there be added to these the ticket holders and the evening's attendance, it may be safely said that not less than 22,000 people visited Prince Alfred Park on Wednesday. Considering this large concourse, it is not surprising that the interior of the Exhibition building was so crowded that any examination of the exhibits was next to impossible. The passages are narrow enough at the best of times, so much has the available space been taken up with goods; but when the building is crowded, all that can be done is to "move on," and inspection of exhibits really worth seeing are perforce passed over. With all the confusion of a crowd, everything was, however, very orderly. Sub-inspector Rush and four sergeants and twenty-four constables of the police force were on the premises, but no case occurred requiring their interference. The visitors—amongst whom were very many from the country—made the best of the limited accommodation available in the most good humoured way possible.

The concert in the evening attracted a large number of visitors to the building; but as before, those present appeared to pay more attention to the promenading than the music. Mr Andrew Fairfax's solos, "The British Anchor" and "The Man-of-war," were, however, much appreciated by those who were close enough to hear them. Mr. Baker sang "Truth in absence," and "The dear little Shamrock," in good style; and Miss Bessie Harrison contributed Abt's "O ye tears," and Balfe's "Killarney." The Volunteer Artillery and the Naval Brigade bands gave some popular selections, and as they were the loudest they may be said to have been the most successful. At a promenade concert, however, instrumental music is doubtless the most effective.

TELEGRAPHIC SUMMARY.

LONDON, MARCH 17.

Sir Daniel Cooper has left for America, to superintend arrangements connected with the New South Wales department at the Philadelphia Exhibition, and also to confer with the American Pacific Mail Steam Co. about the transit of Australian mails between San Francisco and New York, and other matters affecting the improvement of this unsatisfactory service; Sir Daniel is accompanied by his second son, he will afterwards proceed to Sydney.

It is rumoured that the French Government intend to annex a portion of the group of islands associated with the deaths of Bishop Patteson and Commodore Goodenough.

Captain Moresby has just published a two-volume work on New Guinea, which is a welcome contribution to our scant knowledge of that island.

Nothing is now heard of Lieutenant Armit's expedition.

On February 4th the Lord Mayor received from the Mayors of Wellington and Dunedin congratulatory telegrams on the completion of telegraphic communication between England and New Zealand, which were suitably responded to.

On 1st March Mrs. Bladen Neil had an interview with several members of the Royal Colonial Institute, and showed them some articles made from Australian silk, grown by her; much satisfaction was expressed at the result of the experiment. Mrs. Neil is seeking to raise adequate capital to work this new woman's industry.

Two New Zealand provincial 6 per cent. loans of £100,000 each have been successfully floated at about 102 and upwards.

PARLIAMENTARY.

East Suffolk has returned Lieutenant-Colonel H. John Carne, a Conservative, by a large majority; Berkshire has been contested by two Conservatives; Mr. Darby Griffith was defeated by Mr. Broughton at Retford; Mr. Beckett Denison, a Conservative, polled 3538 votes against 3351 for Mr. Bristow a Liberal. Horsham has rejected Sir Hardinge Giffard, Solicitor-General, in favour of Mr. Clifton Brown, a Liberal.

The Navy Estimates amount to £11,288,872, being an increase of £463,678.

The question of cession of Gambia to the French has been referred to a select committee.

On the 21st of February, there was a conversation by the Lords on chain cables used in Royal ships; it was suggested by the failure of the cables during the voyage of the Serapis.

In the House of Commons Mr. Hardy said, it was intended to mobilize two army corps this year.

A five-hours' debate took place on the vote of £4,080,000 for the purchase of the Suez Canal shares, which was granted without division. The principal speakers were Mr. Lowe, Mr. Gladstone, Sir Stafford Northcote, Mr. Roebuck, Earl Hartington, and Mr. Disraeli. In the Opposition speeches the political aspect of the transaction was almost entirely ignored. Mr. Lowe's trumpery criticisms humiliated his own party. Mr. Gladstone's speech was suggestive, but lacked breadth. Two days later he adopted the unusual course of publishing a synopsis of it, in the shape of twenty-six interrogations. The heavy commissions paid to the Rothschilds was severely condemned.

On 22nd February the Lords discussed the merits and demerits of the Martini-Henry rifle.

In the Commons the fugitive slave battle was fought on Mr. Whitbread's motion to cancel every instruction standing in the way of the British flag affording protection to fugitive slaves. The combat was carried over to another night, and two separate divisions gave in each case a majority of 45 to the Government. The question had already been referred to a Royal Commission. Anyhow, the circulars are doomed.

The 23rd was occupied with a discussion of Home Rule bills. On the 24th Lord Salisbury explained the changes projected in his Oxford University Reform Bill; the money now spent on idle fellowships is to be utilised by increasing the professorships, and endowing them more liberally.

On 25th February the Appellate Jurisdiction Bill was debated in the House of Lords, and read a second time in the Commons.

Mr. Holms moved a resolution on army reform, declaring that our present system of retaining men in barracks longer than is necessary to make them efficient soldiers is vicious and immoral, and that it is inexpedient to maintain two rival paid forces in the country; an amendment asserting the contrary was proposed by General Shute, and after a long debate Mr. Holms' resolution was negatived.

On the 28th some condemnatory remarks on the recent executions in the Malay Peninsula elicited from Lord Derby an animated vindication.

In the House of Commons, after a personal question affecting Sir N. Rothschild's right to sit in Parliament after the Suez Canal business, Mr. Goschen called attention to the loss of the Vanguard and obtained a promise from the Government that papers on the subject should be produced. Papers on the introduction of measles into Fiji were also ordered to be laid on the table.

On the 29th, Sir Charles Dilke drew an extraordinary picture of the unreformed Corporations of England and Wales, and moved a resolution for the removal of the anomalies and abuses described; the Home Secretary undertook to afford every facility for inqu

Government have purchased Stensall Common, near York, consisting of 2000 acres, for military purposes.

Much excited feeling has prevailed throughout the month with regard to the scandalous running down of the Strathclyde by the Franconia, off Dover pier, by which about 30 lives were lost; six bodies only have been recovered, and two separate inquests have been held at Deal and Poplar; in both instances verdicts of manslaughter have been delivered against the captain of the German steamer, who is admitted to bail. The master of the steam-tug Palmerston, so severely condemned at first for leaving the drowning people to perish, has offered explanations which palliate his conduct. The sole excuse made by the officers and crew of the Franconia for steaming away from the wreck was that they thought they were sinking and would require all the boats for themselves.

On the 7th March the Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, paid a visit in semi-state to the East End to open the new wing of the London Hospital, erected mainly at the cost of the Grocers' Company. Of the three public appearances made by her Majesty within the past month, the reception on this occasion was the most gratifying of all. The cheering throughout a course of four miles was most hearty, and no disloyal cry was heard. The decorations, extending from the city eastwards, were unusually effective, and some of the inscriptions quite won the Queen's heart. Some touching incidents are told connected with the Royal inspection of the hospital wards. Besides the gift of the Grocers' Company, £70,000 have been received in donations stimulated by the Queen's visit. The day was sunny, but extremely cold.

On the 9th the Queen attended the funeral of Lady Augusta Stanley, at Westminster Abbey. The Queen is expected to leave for the Continent on the 25th March. She proceeds direct to Baden Baden, and will return to Windsor in time to meet the Prince of Wales, who will probably reach home about April 20. A brilliant series of Courtly festivities are expected to follow that event.

On the 22nd February Prince Leopold was installed Grand Master of the Oxfordshire Freemasons, Earl Carnarvon presiding. The ceremony took place in the Sheldonian Theatre in presence of a large company of masons from all parts of the country; it was succeeded by a banquet at the Corn Exchange. The Prince is now travelling incognito on the Continent as Baron Balmoral.

The Empress of Austria has arrived at Easton Neston in Northamptonshire, where she is about to spend a month with the ex-Queen of Naples hunting.

The Channel squadron has left Lisbon for Madeira, whence it will proceed to Gibraltar to await the arrival of the Prince of Wales.

Don Carlos arrived at Folkestone on the 4th instant, and as the same steamer brought over delegates from the Municipality of Boulogne, the cheers with which they were greeted were taken as a demonstration in honour of Don Carlos. A procession of Druids and Oddfellows learning who he was hooted and jeered him during the time he waited at the railway station for the London train. On arriving in London he was both cheered and hissed by the crowd outside Charing Cross station. He stays at Brown's Hotel, and intends to visit Scotland.

General Schenck left on the 3rd March for Liverpool on his way to America to answer the charge against him in connection with the Bruma mine. At Euston station, on starting he was served with a writ, which he coolly handed to the second secretary of Legation. Mr. Dana has been appointed his successor.

Mr. Heywood, owner of the Mistletoe, has been offered £3000 compensation for loss by the Admiralty.

The ev. Sidney Turner, lately installed Dean of Ripon, is compelled to resign through ill health.

Lord Kedesdale, Mr. Trevelyn, and Mr. S. Morley, who have been ill, are steadily recovering.

Lord Chief Justice Cockburn has been presented with the freedom of the city.

The Court of Common Council have decided to give the Prince of Wales on his return a befitting reception in the city of London, a committee has been appointed to make arrangements.

Lieutenant-General Haines succeeds Lord Napier of Magdala as Commander-in-chief in India.

Mr. John Douglas is appointed Colonial Secretary of the Straits Settlements; and Mr. Pemberton, Chief Justice of Bahama Islands.

Cape advices report a destructive fire at Little Popo; owing to the presence of large quantities of gunpowder numerous explosions took place; in one house two thousand kegs exploded causing a shock like an earthquake; about fifty persons are reported to be killed.

The Leeds Amphitheatre was totally destroyed by fire — damage, 30,000; woollen mill of Mr. Edward Ashwood, at Cope, in Rosendale, was burnt down—damage, £20,000. A fire in shipyard at Hull did immense damage to building, stores, and a steamer.

At Festiniog slate quarries seven men were lately crushed beneath a mass of rock weighing several tons; their bodies are not all recovered.

Fourteen victims of the milk-poisoning at Edgley, near Bolton, have died, and several continue ill.

The coffee crop in Costa Rica has sustained extensive damage by inundations.

For weeks past most harrowing accounts reach us of desolating floods in Hungary, Moravia, and some parts of Germany. Several districts of Pesth and Buda have been under water a fortnight, and hundreds of houses have collapsed into ruins. The Danube rose 24 feet above its normal level near its borders; fifty-five villages were submerged. Great distress prevails, and the Emperor has sent 60,000 florins for the relief of the sufferers. The most damage is done in the Magdeburg district, and the town of Schoenebeck, where six hundred houses have been flooded, many up to the roof; the inmates escaped through attic windows. Many persons have perished in the City of Posen; nearly all the large rivers of Germany have overflowed their banks, and great privations will long have to be endured.

At a meeting of the National Federation of Employers, it was stated that the accounts of the Amalgamated Society of Engineers had been investigated by a reliable accountant, who declared that instead of having £20,000 available, as was so recently boasted, the society was insolvent to the extent of £100,000.

The lock-out of farm labourers, for joining the Labour League, has begun; in Essex over 100 men are already out, and about 400 more are under notice.

With regard to the Rifle Challenge from America, for the championship of the world, to be contested at Philadelphia, the Irish team are willing to withdraw their acceptance in favour of a team representing the best shots of the United Kingdom, if the Scotch team would also withdraw; but as there was no chance of the Scotch National Club doing so, an English team will not go.

Weston, the American pedestrian, successfully achieved the feat of walking 275 miles in 75 hours against C. Rowell, who was allowed to run or walk, and had 50 miles given him. Weston finished within four minutes of the stipulated time, while his competitor had covered only 175 miles. 6000 persons were present in the Agricultural Hall during the last few hours, and great excitement prevailed. After a weeks' rest Weston undertook the astounding task of walking 500 miles in six consecutive days and nights; he commenced at 12.5 on Monday morning, and went on pluckily, though not without suffering, but only accomplished 450 miles. His failure, however, was not considered a disgrace, and the applause that greeted him from 12,000 spectators was quite indescribable.

Official advices have been received confirming the news of the complete defeat of the Abyssinians by the Egyptian troops; the former are said to have numbered 60,000 men, and the latter 20,000. It is generally thought that the war is at an end.

Of the Strathmore's passengers landed at Galle, two have gone to England, one found employment in Ceylon, and eight third-class got free passages by Bangalore to Australia from the Ceylon Government.

Health is good in Ceylon, but small-pox still prevails in Bombay.

THE PHILADELPHIA RIFLE MATCH.

THE final competition for the selection of members to represent New South Wales at Philadelphia took place at the Paddington range on Tuesday, and although the weather was favourable at the first two ranges it was changeable and puffy at 1000 yards, rendering the shooting more difficult at that range Such shooting as that exhibited by Captain Smith and Mr. J. J. Slade, at 800 yards, has never been equalled in the colonies, and seldom in any part of the world. We may, therefore, hope to see our representatives give a good account of themselves should they visit Philadelphia.

Ensign Maddocks obtained the first position with the fine score of 197 points; Mr. Slade second, with 196 points; Captain Smith third, with 193 points; Mr Gee fourth, with 19 points; and Mr. Lynch fifth, with 192 points. These are all good scores for 15 shots at 800, 900 and 1000 yards. The following is a detailed account of the scores made on Friday and Tuesday last:—

The five representatives of this colony will therefore be Captain Smith, of No. 8 Company; private Gee, of No. 5 Company; private Lynch, of No. 5 Company; Ensign Maddocks, of No. 1 Company; and private Slade, of No. 1 Company

Captain Smith, the top-scorer, has obtained the premier position in the team by 20 points above any other competitor He was top-scorer in the intercolonial practices for 1874 and 1875: made the highest score with the Enfield and Henry rifle ever made this side of the line, and also made top-score in the last intercolonial match he took part in, in 1867; in addition to which he has been twice top in the above competitions, once second, once third, and once fourth. It may therefore be confidently expected that he and his able colleagues will show the Americans the way into the bull's-eye on the other side of the ocean.

RIFLE MATCH.—On Easter Monday a match was shot at Goulburn between No. 6 Co., 1st Regiment, and the Goulburn Company. The conditions of the match were to be five shots each man, at 200, 500, and 600 yards—10 men aside—but, as the Goulburn Corps are armed with the Hay Rifle, they were allowed one extra shot per man at 500 and 600 yards. The result of the contest was in favour of No. 6, who won by 18 points. There being only one set of targets available dusk had begun to set in before the conclusion of the match which materially affected the score of those who were last to fire. During the afternoon the contending teams adjourned to an excellent luncheon which was provided by the Goulburn Company, to which ample justice was done. Captain Morris, his officers, and team were heartily welcomed and cheered, and hopes were expressed that many such contests should take place between No. 6 Co. and a Goulburn team. The scores were as follows, viz.:—

No. 6 Co.—15 shots.		Goulburn Co.—17 shots.

MUDGEE.

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

THE business before the Circuit Court was continued and concluded since my last. George Pitt was found guilty of the murder of Ann Mary Martin, at Guntawang, on the 25th of December last, and sentenced to death—Judge Faucett holding out but little hope of any extenuation of the sentence. The case occupied the greater portion of Tuesday, the 18th instant, and a great deal of evidence was taken, which may be briefly summed up as follows:—The deceased kept the Travellers' Rest Inn, at Guntawang, and the prisoner had been lodging there for some time A certain degree of intimacy seemed to have existed between them, and the prisoner had been heard, on one occasion at least, asking the deceased to marry him, which the latter refused to do, stating (deceased was a widow) she would never marry again. The deceased had also been heard telling the prisoner, on the very day on which the murder was committed, that he would have to get work and clear out of the place. On last Christmas, as the deceased was retiring for the night, in company with her niece, Kate L'Estrange, the prisoner came to the bedroom door and asked her to come out into the passage, as he wished to speak to her. The deceased refused to go at first, but on prisoner repeating the request ultimately consented. The niece heard her aunt call her shortly afterwards, and on going to the bedroom door saw the prisoner at it with a knife in his hand, both the knife and the prisoner's hands being covered with blood. Prisoner said to the niece, "I've cut ——— mother Martin's throat, and if you don't look out I'll cut yours too." On hearing this the niece retreated into the bedroom got out at a window, rushed round to the front of the house, where several lodgers were sleeping, and made known what she had seen and what Pitt had told her. On these lodgers, who were just retiring for the night, going into the passage, Mrs. Martin was found with her throat cut, and died almost immediately afterwards. The prisoner afterwards made a very mild attempt to cut his own throat. On the police arriving on the spot prisoner told them the deceased had first attempted to cut his throat, and then cut her own; but that very little credence was placed in this statement may be gleaned from the fact that the counsel for the defence never referred to it, confining his address to urging the jury to acquit the prisoner of murder, and convict of manslaughter, on the plea that the act was committed during a frenzy of jealousy.

Another case that attracted a good deal of attention, and was watched with much interest, was the trial of William Simmonds, charged with the murder of Joseph Todd, at Magpie Gully, near Gulgong. Todd had been convicted some two years since of abducting the prisoner's daughter, then a girl under 12 years of age, and was sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment for the offence. On getting out of gaol Todd was seen by Simmonds near the latter's place, who warned him to keep away. It may be stated that Simmonds is a widower, having a family of five small children, of whom the girl referred to is the eldest, and that while he was at work at his avocation of a gold-miner he left this girl at home in charge of the other children. That home consisted of two small huts, close together—in one of which Simmonds and his little son slept, the other being occupied by the girl and her younger sisters. Simmonds suspected that when away at work Todd visited the girl, which he had evidently, as was shown by the evidence, contaminated, and he (Simmonds) told his little boy, if he saw Todd about the place, to come and tell him. This boy, a lad about 9 years of age, saw Todd at the girl's hut and went and told his (the boy's) father. The latter left his work, and on getting to the hut saw Todd in an indecent position with the girl. On seeing this Simmonds went to his own hut and got a double-barrelled and loaded gun, and on going to the girl's hut next door saw odd under the bed and fired at him, discharging the second barrel as he went out of the door. The latter ran about fifteen yards and then fell, shortly afterwards expiring. Simmonds and others went and called a constable, whom he told what he had done, and then proceeded to the Gulgong police and gave himself up. The above facts were deposed to at the trial, and Mr. Buchanan—who appeared for the defence—pleaded hard, and with very considerable ability and feeling for a verdict of justifiable homicide. Judge Faucett, however, in summing up, pointedly stated that a verdict of "justifiable homicide" would not meet the merits of the case, and cautioned the jury not to take the law into their own hands. His Honor further inferred that a verdict of manslaughter which would be punished very severely or very slightly according to the circumstances) would suit the case. The jury returned a verdict of manslaughter, with a strong recommendation to mercy on account of the extreme provocation received by the accused. Mr. Justice Faucett, after complimenting the jury, of which Mr. R Rouse, of Guntawang, was foreman on delivering he verdict they did, and not taking the law into their hands, stated that he fully agreed with the recommendation to mercy, considering the provocation received by the accused was extreme; and after inquiry, finding that Simmonds had already been two months in gaol, sentenced him to an additional month's continement. Considerable sympathy is felt in this district with Simmonds, who is considered to have been sinned against than sinning; and the deceased is thought to have most righteously deserved the awful end he met with. A man named William Ernest Jordan, well-known in the district, and a short time back arrested on the charge of having been connected with the stealing of the race-horse Duke of Athol, from Mr. J. T. Tindale's, Bylong station, was sentenced to two years' imprisonment for forgery. Two brothers, named James and William Hayes, and a man named Charles O'Hara, were sentenced to twenty months' imprisonment each for horse-stealing. George Richard Sherwin, convicted of illegally killing a number of sheep, belonging to Mr. M'Leod, a grazier at Capertee, was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment. Robert Prior, found guilty of shooting with intent to do grievous bodily harm at Gulgong, received a sentence of one year's imprisonment. The above, with a few cases of minor importance, concluded one of the heaviest calendars that has ever come before a Circuit Court in Mudgee.

The annual Easter meeting of the members of St. John's Church was held during the week, when the following churchwardens were elected for the ensuing year:—Trustees' churchwarden, the Hon. G. H. Cox; people's churchwarden, Mr. R. B. D. White, J.P.; clergyman's churchwarden, Mr. Evan Richards. At the same meeting a purse of 60 sovereigns was presented as an Easter offering to the Rev. Archdeacon Gunther.

The annual tea meeting in connection with the Wesleyan Sabbath-school was held during the week in the school-room adjoining the church and very largely attended. A public meeting was afterwards held, Mr. Powell in the chair. The annual report of the Mudgee Wesleyan Sabbath-school was read by the secretary, Mr. A. Arnold, from which it appeared that there were ten male and eight female teachers attached to the school, and 94 boys and 73 girls, or a total of 167 children on the roll. The meeting was afterwards addressed by the Revs. R. Caldwell and B. J. Meek, and Mr. A. H. Kellett; and a vote of thanks to the ladies who provided the tea, and another to the chairman, terminated the proceedings.

No rain has fallen during the past week, nor do present appearances indicate that we will be soon blessed with any, though it is very badly wanted, and more especially by the adjacent farmers, many of whom are unable to plough their lands through its absence.

The fat cattle market is firm, with every prospect of continuing so during the winter. Best beef is worth 25s. per 100 lbs., with other qualities from 20s. to 23s. Over 2000 head have been quitted in the local market during the week at the figures named Fat sheep of good quality are in demand, but very scarce, the market being fairly supplied with medium. Best sheep are worth from 10s. to 12s., with others from 7s. to 9s. Above 2,000 have been quitted here during the week at the prices stated.

For store stock, both cattle and sheep, there is very little demand, a state of matters likely to continue till spring commences. Prices are barely quotable.—April 25.

FIRE NEAR MELBOURNE—TWO PERSONS SEVERELY BURNT.—At about a quarter-past 11 o'clock on Sunday night (the Argus states), a fire broke out in a four-roomed wooden house, situated in Peel-street, Windsor, occupied by William Mills, cabdriver, through which two persons were dangerously injured. The fire was first discovered by some neighbours, and before the inmates, who were in bed, could be got out, they were very severely burnt. Mills and his wife were at once conveyed by constable Mansfield to the Alfred Hospital. Upon arriving there it was found that Mrs. Mills had been so severely burnt that she is not expected to recover. The fire also destroyed the adjoining wooden house, occupied by Mrs. Hall, but most of the furniture was removed. The two houses destroyed were owned by Mr. James Palmer, and were insured for £200 in the National Insurance Company. [We learn by telegram that Mills and his wife have since died.]

REVIEW.

THE STUDENT'S GRAMMAR.*

For the reason that this book is so good it is to be regretted that the authors did not labour to make it somewhat better. The new grammar aims high. It is not a grammar for elementary pupils, but for advanced students, and we understand that it has already been announced as the future text book in English grammar for candidates for matriculation in the University of Melbourne. We confess that we have read this announcement with some surprise, for, excellent as some parts of the Student's Grammar undoubtedly are, as a whole it can scarcely be compared with some of those grammars on which it professes to be based.

The book consists of 156 pages. About twenty-five of these pages are occupied with parsing and analysis, three deal with syntax, and nearly all the rest are occupied with the usual parts of speech, or, in other words, with etymology. The authors say very truly that they have left out much that is often inserted in grammars. The opinion which impartial readers will generally form will be that they have left out too much, or that writers like Latham and Mason have inserted too much. Orthoëpy and orthography, prosody and punctuation, are omitted alogether; and the short chapter on syntax which closes the book is so unmistakably meagre and poor, and looks so much like an afterthought, that it might have been omitted also without materially affecting the character of the grammar. With the exception of the introduction which sketches the historic relationships of the English language, and the chapter on the changes that take place in language, which are by far the best parts of the book, the Student's Grammar consists mainly of about a dozen chapters on the different parts of speech. The absence of all classification, in regard to the different branches of which English grammar is usually supposed to consist, has all the charm of novelty about it; but it can scarcely be said to recommend a University text-book or, indeed, any book on English grammar which aims at consistency or completeness. The unequalness which is apparent in several features of this Grammar is, perhaps, the result of double authorship; but if this be the case, a book of this kind loses more than it gains by growing out of two minds instead of one.

The authors of this book have called it the Student's Grammar; it might, however, have been as properly called anybody else's grammar as the Student's Grammar. The parts of it which are really interesting and valuable are likely to be so to those whose business it is to teach rather than to those whose business it is to be taught. Parts of the book are indeed sufficiently simplified for students or pupils of any grade. In the chapter on the purpose of grammar, for example, we are told that "men or women explain to one another what they think, feel, or want by the use of words:" that syllables "are parts of words," and that while in some languages every word is a single sound or syllable, in English there are words of one syllable, like "cow," "horse," and words of two or more syllables, like "emu," "kangaroo," "caterpillar." A name we are told, "may either denote one thing or more than one. A name which denotes only one thing is said to be in the singular number, as clock, horse, virtue. A name which denotes more than one thing is said to be in the plural number, as clocks, horses, virtues." The whole of this is true, and is proper enough in a grammar. But it can hardly be necessary to explain matters of this kind so very minutely in a grammar intended for students especially.

Much however, which Mr. Pearson and Professor Strong have given us belongs quite as much to a hand book of the English language, or to a treatise on philology, as to even a student's grammar of the dimensions of the volume before us. Thus on page 54 we are duly informed that "the relative pronouns are who, which, what, that, as, but immediately following this is a philological digression in which it is explained that in Anglo-Saxon the demonstration "se," "seo," "thaet," was habitually used to supply the place of our modern relative pronouns. Who and what were in Anglo-Saxon interrogative; "what" was the neuter of "who;" "which" is a compound of "hwi," the instrumental case of "hwa" "who," and "lic"—like. Lic is itself a substantive, meaning "body," found in the modern German form "Leichnam," a corpse, and in our word "lych"—gate, just as instar in La in means "a pattern," and is also used in the sense of "after the model or likeness of." The change of meaning from interrogative to relative has been ascribed to French influence, for all the Roman languages use the same set of pronouns as interrogatives and as relatives. Thus, in French, "Who did this?" is "Qui a fait cela?" And "The man who did this," is "L'homme qui a fait cela." The Teutonic group of languages, like the Greek, take their relatives from the demonstratives. Thus wh reas in French to express, "The man whom I saw," we say, "L'homme que je vis," in German we say "Der mann der ich sah." These philological digressions are exceedingly interesting and suggestive, and some of them are among the most valuable features in the book; but they surely belong to a separate treatise on philology, or at least to a separate philological section, and not to the pages which minutely explain what nouns are singular rather than plural, and what pronouns are relative rather than demonstrative. The two kinds of information are valuable, but they are valuable for students of widely different classes, and would have been much better arranged in separate divisions.

The principal peculiarity of the Student's Grammar is found in its new grammatical terminology. All the parts of speech are presented, if not with entirely new significations, with entirely new names. The noun is a "name word," the pronoun a "forname," the adjective is a "note word," the conjunction is a link word, the verb is a "word of description," the adverb a degree word, the auxiliary is a help word, the article is "a word of singling," the preposition is a word of relation, and the interjection is an exclamation-word. The attempt to make the representative terms in English grammar simple and natural rather than difficult and arbitrary is no doubt a commendable one, but it is not likely to be very successful. People will go on using nouns and pronouns rather than "name words," and "fornames" and verbs and adverbs rather than words of description" and degree words," and they may be pardoned for so doing, for whatever objection there may be to the familar designations of the nine parts of speech, those designations are to be preferred to the new ones furnished in the Student's Grammar. Whether the names of the different parts of speech correctly express their meanings or not, there are few students who do not know very well what the meanings are. There is, doubtless, much to be done in the way of making our grammatical nomenclature intelligible and sensible, but very little is gained in this direction by calling prepositions words of relation, adjectives note words, articles words of singling, and verbs description words. Some of these definitions are neither accurate nor helpful, and the substitution of any of them for the terms in ordinary use is not likely to answer any good purpose. A simple rule of syntax dressed in this strange terminology presents a new subject for study. Thus Messrs. Pearson and Strong tell us—"A name word, or a forname coupled by a degree word of comparison, takes the same case as the name-word or forname with which it is compared." Another rule slightly altered is that when a name-word proper or a forname is used to extend a description word of incomplete predication, it is in the same case as the subject.

The effort to simplify grammatical terms would have been more satisfactory if the writers had commenced with some other department of their subject instead of with the parts of speech The parts of speech give but little trouble to anybody, and nothing will be lost if they are allowed to remain as they are, but the endless definitions and divisions in the moods and tenses of the verbs, for example, are here left as cumbersome as they are unnecessary. These definitions and divisions are in the Student's Grammar drawn out to a length that will gladden the heart of everybody who believes that the excellence of an English Grammar is to be measured by its incomprehensibleness Thus, under a single mood of the verb, we have not only the usual present, past, perfect, and pluperfect tenses—all of which suggest ideas that a student may easily comprehend and retain—but we have simple present, simple past, and simple perfect, and then simple present of freedom, simple present of possibility and simple past and perfect not only of freedom and possibility, but of obligation and purpose also. Under the head of the passive form of the participle, we have not only the usual subdivisions of past, present, and future, perfect and pluperfect, but those subdivisions are further subdivided into future of obligation, of purpose, of circumstance, of duty, and of necessity. Not only so, but the future perfect has all its ramifications of obligation, purpose, circumstance, duty, and necessity as well as other futures. No doubt these endless divisions of moods and tenses are exceedingly orthodox and profound, but they will not greatly contribute towards the prevention of "Cram" or towards the placing of English Grammar on a basis of intelligibleness and common sense. The writers of the Student's Grammar should either have carried the work of reforming grammar beyond the definitions of the nine parts of speech or they should have stopped before those definitions were reached.

The want of precision, and in some instances of correctness, is so apparent in the volume before us as to create surprise that some revision was not deemed necessary before the book was made a text book for matriculation candidates. Take the two statements of the uses of grammar itself. "Grammar" says one of them, "teaches us how to arrange words, so that people may know exactly what we mean to express, and not only that we are talking or writing about something" "The use of grammar," we are told again, "is first to tell us what the parts of speech are, and how to arrange them; and next to show us the changes or inflections by which we increase the usefulness of the parts of speech. This is like saying that the use of a house is first to tell us what bricks and mortar are and how to arrange them, and next to show the changes or inflections by which we conceive the usefulness of bricks and mortar. It is difficult to conceive a definition of the use of grammar more inexact and more imperfect. The use of grammar it tells us is to show us the parts of speech and then to show us how to increase the usefulness of the parts of speech. On page 77, which is devoted to the verb, or rather the description word, to be, we have an illustration of one form of the verb given, in the language of a text from the Bible—"Before Abraham was I am." This is correct and simple enough, but the author of the Student's Grammar deemed it necessary to insert a grammatical interpretation, and it is as follows:—"Before Abraham was born I have been as I am and shall be." It would have been better if between the text and the interpretation, the authors had inserted the words, "that is not." instead of "that is." Many of the grammatical definitions are quite as loose and inaccurate as this interpretation. Thus "the preposition or word of relation is a word commonly placed before another word in order to show the relation in which the two words stand to each other," and again the preposition differs from a verb, because it cannot take a noun or pronoun before it; it differs from a conjunction, because it takes a noun after it." The reason given for changing the adjective into note words is that "the name note word means that it gives the note or mark by which we distinguish one individual from another;" respecting which it may be said that adjectives do not necessarily refer to individuals at all, and where they do they do not necessarily give any note by which we distinguish one individual from another. These inaccuracies are specimens of a large number of others. Notwithstanding many blemishes and imperfections, however, we cordially welcome the Student's Grammar, and although it cannot be confidently recommended as the best text book for matriculation candidates, the book is a good and useful one, and with such revisions and additions as may be made in a second edition it may become a very valuable contribution to our Colonial Literature.

THE BIBLE AND THE STATUTE BOOK IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

SIR,—If we are to accept the Rev. Mr. Taylor as Minister of Public Education, we shall have to turn the Primary school into something like a University, having a church college in affiliation with it. The rev. gentleman tells us that the State is bound to make us hear the Bible read in Primary schools, because "the State enforces the morality which is contained therein." I am far from sure that the state does anything of the kind. To me it seems that sincerity, honesty, temperance, piety, chastity, sobriety industry, frugality, and a few other moralities are scarcely enforced at all, though I understand that a few notorious transgressions are occasionally made an example of. I acknowledge, however, that Mr. Taylor ought to know better than I whether the morality enforced by the State does or does not come up to the Bible standard.

If the Bible is to be read in State schools because it enforces Bible morality, then, for the same reason, the law of the land the statute-book ought to be read in the same and in all other schools. The State enforces the statute, also the common law; and if Mr. Taylor reason rightly, it is clear that the statute-book, as well as the Bible, ought to be read in the Primary school; in which case the Primary school will become a higher school than any we have at present. The most expensively educated youngsters leave school or college as ignorant of law as if it were a thing with which they could never have any concern. Let the statute-book of New South Wales be read every morning in every A B C school for half-an-hour, I wonder how much law the little ones would learn by the operation.

Mr. Taylor is pleased to assign another reason for half-an-hour's daily reading of the Bible. He says:—"It is a part of the honour which the State ought to render unto God, that His Word should be placed as an authority in every school in the country." Surely Mr. Taylor cannot mean what he says here. If the State honours God by making the schoolmaster read the Bible in every Primary school, the State does its honours very cheaply, and very easily. The honour is extremely small and shabby, compared to what it ought to be and might be. When honours are to be rendered by any State in the world to earthly potentates, it is the grandees, the nobility, the gentry, and the clergy, not Primary schoolmasters, who are selected to officiate upon the occasion. If Mr. Taylor thinks that the Primary school master is the fittest person to tender the honour which the State ought to render to God, I can only say that his views are extremely peculiar, and that there is no telling what extravagance they may lead him into. After this, he will surprise no one if he should contend that every policeman should read the Bible for half an hour before he takes any person into custody—"as a part of the honour which the State ought to render unto God."

I strongly suspect that the rev. and worthy gentleman has got into the habit of expressing himself very inaccurately. He cannot always mean what he says.

BIBLE COMBINATION.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

SIR,—Having read with mingled feelings of interest and perplexity the discussion at present being carried on upon the subject of scriptural instruction in our Public schools, I venture to suggest that if all who so warmly advocate the introduction of the Bible into the schools as a lesson book for those children whose parents desire it, or at least do not object, are sufficiently sincere in their desires which I have no reason to doubt, they may at once, with at any more discussion, commence the good work independent of the Government or anybody else in the following way.

The hour for religious instruction is already granted, and can no doubt ever be retained if a proper use is made of it; then let the Bible Combination at once turn its efforts in another and more profitable direction viz.:—1st. To secure sufficient Bibles or Testaments, and hymn-books, for every Public school throughout the colony; and, secondly, make arrangements whereby the hour granted for religious instruction shall be made one of the most profitable and pleasant of the day by enlisting the heavy co-operation of all ministers and laymen who believe in the Divine command to those who would show their love to the Saviour, "Feed my lambs;" and by making such arrangements as shall secure a regular staff of instructors to carry on the work systematically; 3rd, a training school should be instituted for the study of the Bible, in which many of our young people, especially of the fair sex,

Royal George was imported for stud purposes, and has served for two seasons in the herd, and is only for sale on account of Mr. M'Culloch having Rapid to fill his place. He has proved himself one of the strongest and best stock getters in this colony. He was awarded first prize as a two-year old at the Victoria Agricultural Society's show last year, and the same year he gained first prize in the three-year old class at the National Show, Melbourne.
Royal Brougham, bred by Mr. Booth; by Commander-in-Chief, first prize bull at the Meeting of the Royal Agricultural Society of England, 1868, out of Lady Mirth by Sir Samuel (15302), &c., is own brother to Mr. Mengall's celebrated sire Field Marshal Booth. Industry, bred by Mr. Aylmer, is in direct descent from Mr. Bates's celebrated Isabella tribe, so that Royal George is nearly by the own brother to the celebrated Essendon Lad, and is also full of the famous Booth blood through his dam.
